► THE BIRTH OF A LEGEND

The modern form of sport became one of the phenomena of the 20th century, and we are watching its unstoppable growth in a very dynamic form to this day.

And in athletics itself, the marathon has become such a phenomenon. Already the first renewed modern Olympic Games in Athens in 1896, supported by the ideas of Baron Pierre de Coubertin, indicated the position this royal running discipline would gradually grow into. Because it was thanks to the marathon that it was possible to connect the ancient with the modern via a unique arc. Thus, in 1896, the premiere of the marathon run, whose name was derived from the town of Marathon, Greece, took place in modern athletic competitions. It was in Marathon, in 490 BC, that the Persian army landed with the aim of conquering the Athenians. But the Athenians defeated the enemy, despite his multiple superiority, and they sent the messenger Pheidippides to Athens with the news of victory, with the news of peace. He ran around 40 kilometers and after saying the words "We have won", he collapsed, exhausted, and died. A legend was born, spreading around the world after 1896, as a symbol of steadfastness and the desire for freedom.

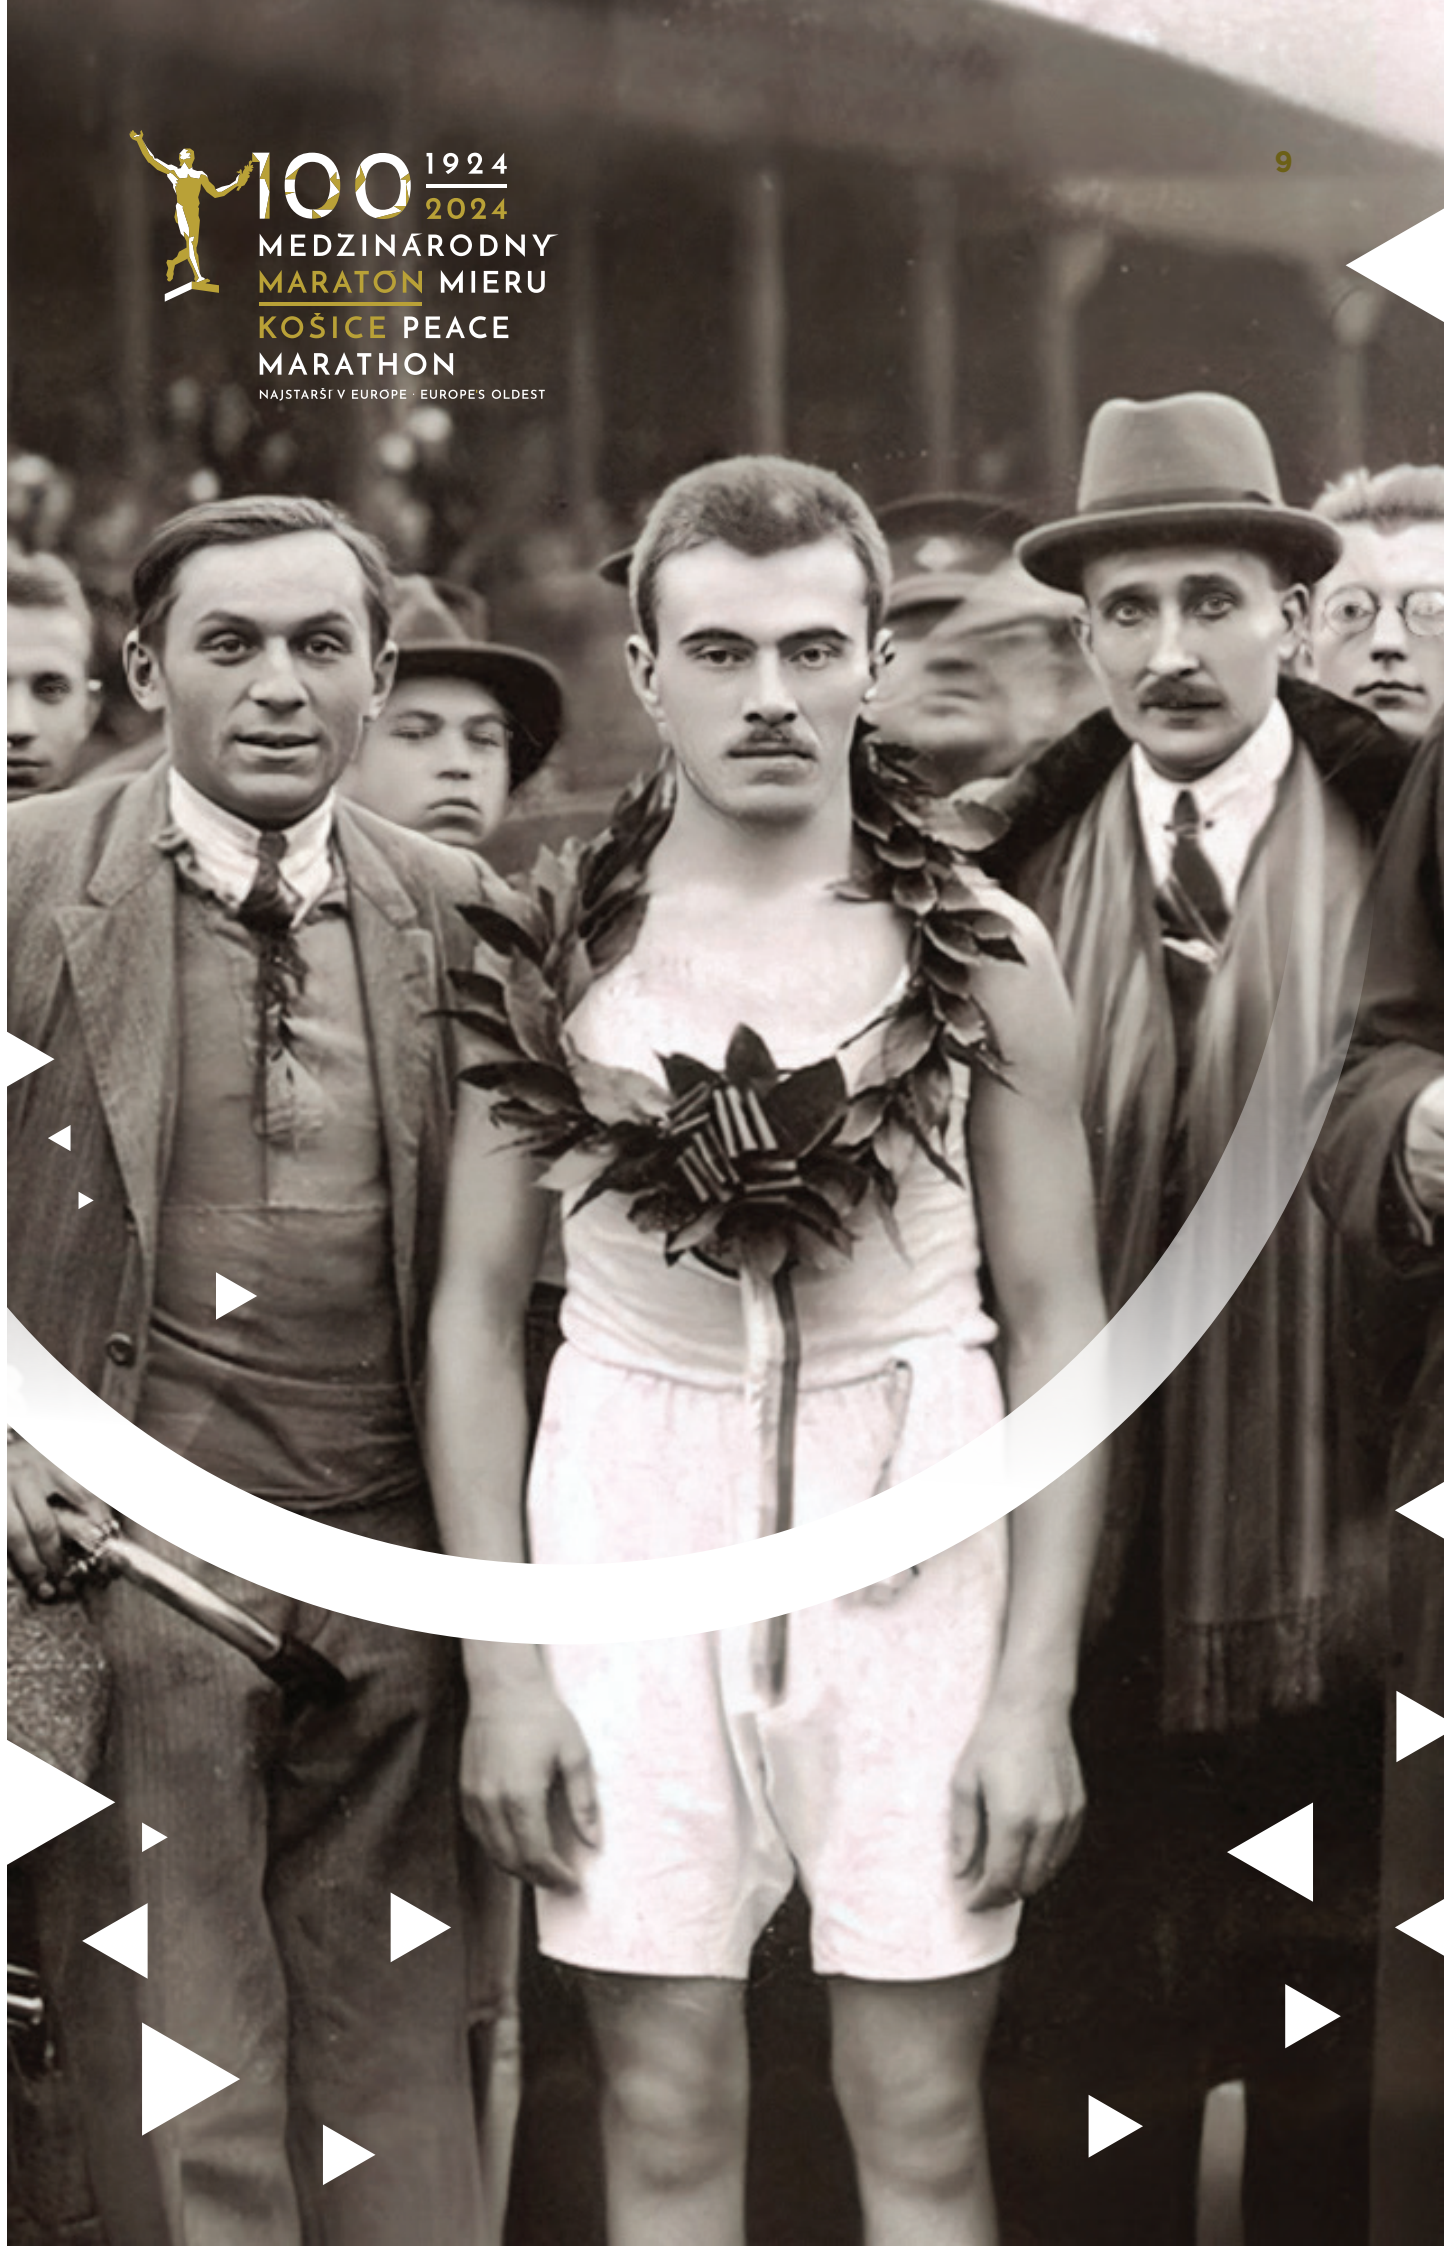

After the premiere in Athens, the Olympic flame was gradually lit in other cities, before heading to Paris in 1924. And here, somewhere, the thread of events began to unfold which finally led to the birth of the marathon tradition in Košice. We will not reveal anything new if we say that Vojtech Bukovský, barely 30 years old at the time, had a decisive say in the whole effort. We know that he was born on November 4, 1894, in a house on Peštianská Street in the family of Košice businessman Leopold Braun. He finished his studies at a high school in Košice in 1912, that is, in the year when shooter Alexander Prokopp, athlete František Szobota and gymnast Ľudovít Kmeťko, who as a teacher greatly influenced Bukovský, represented this city at the Olympics in Stockholm. After graduation, he enrolled in the Faculty of Construction at the Technical University in Budapest, but he completed it only after the First World War, in which he was wounded and decorated for bravery. Already during his studies, he was actively involved in sports events, from 1909 in athletics; later he was known by many as an enthusiastic promoter and organizer of competitions in cycling, fencing and cross-country skiing.

All this led Bukovský to the decision to visit the Olympic Games in Paris in 1924, from where, among other things, he enthusiastically wrote to the then-daily newspaper Kassai Napló. From the stands of the Parisian stadium in Colombes, he also watched athletic competitions with great interest, but it was the marathon that made the biggest impression on him. That's when the idea of organizing a similar competition in Košice also popped into his head. After returning from the Olympic Games, at a meeting of the regional district of the athletics union on August 19 in the Slávia cafe, the decisive words were heard. After a debriefing on their experiences from the Olympics, those present also heard a proposal for organizing a marathon. There were perhaps two months left until October 28, 1924, the celebration of the sixth anniversary of the founding of Czechoslovakia.

In the next few pages of this book you can read about how Bukovský and his friends managed to do it and, after them, other generations of passionate organizers.

1924 AT THE VERY BEGINNING

What new can now be written in a few lines about year number one?

The determination with which Vojtech Bukovský returned from the Olympics in Paris in the summer of 1924 and which ultimately lasted many decades for him has already been captured by chroniclers in many ways. But it is precisely this character trait of his, i.e., his immense determination, that we can thank the most for the fact that no one could, and actually did not even want to question the solid foundations of the marathon later on.

It was on his initiative that after the meeting of the regional district of the Czechoslovak Amateur Athletic Union in the Slávia café on August 19, where it was decided that such a race would be run on October 28, everyone began feverish preparations.

It is also interesting to mention how the route itself was thought about before the premiere year. There were allegedly five alternatives on the table, all counting on running in one direction, that is, from the starting point to the destination. In addition to the ultimately chosen Turňa, Prešov, Košická Belá, Bidovce or Dargov could have also gone down in history, had they been chosen. The vertical profile of the considered course certainly weighed in the final decision. The one finally chosen was obviously the flattest and thus the easiest for runners. According to the applications received, 17 of them dared to go on this adventure a few days before October 28, but several of them eventually backed down, and at the start itself, eyewitnesses could see eight slender figures jumping up and down. If you were looking for a favorite, there wouldn't be many criteria. Perhaps the best guide could have been the results of the background check, which Bukovský and his friends organized on 31 August in order to verify in the field how well they could handle it at the end of October. The test went well, with Karol Halla winning the 30 kilometer trial race, so there was no doubt that he would be the one to count on. And so it happened. In the cold weather, which accompanied the day of the national holiday of the establishment of the first Czechoslovak Republic, he did not find a conqueror on the track from Turňa. A laurel wreath was hung around his neck, several volleys were fired, and everyone promised each other that evening in a euphoric mood that they would meet like this every year.

Halla kept his promise and eventually tried nine more times for the championship. Although unsuccessful, he had an admirable balance of times that bear the unifying adjective „just over 3 hours.“

And the others from that successful premiere didn't stand aside either. Several, especially the second-place finisher Andrej Schuller, became a fixed part of the events for the next few years.

It was at the games of the eighth Olympiad in 1924 that the desire to organize a marathon run at home in Košice was born in his mind.

The first marathon runners in the first photo. Of the seventeen registered, only eight finally found the courage to even stand at the start. Halla, Tronka, Badoniý, Kulcsár from KAC, Schuller from Slavia and soldiers Zajič, Lenart and Schmidt. All but one of them achieved reached the finish line.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

In addition to the birth of the marathon, the year 1924 in Košice was exceptional in many other ways. From May 5, 1924, regular flights began on the Prague-Bratislava-Košice line, and in the same year a concrete hangar and a station check-in building were built in the premises of the so-called Old Airport, which still stands today in its original place.

The ceremonial opening of the new state hospital was also a long-awaited event in the city. This happened on June 24, 1924, eight years after the start of construction, which was slowed down mainly by the First World War. Seven of the 14 planned pavilions were opened that day with a total capacity of 600 beds. And the others gradually increased.

1925 WITH A CYCLIST ON EACH SIDE

After the successful first edition of the marathon, which quickly gained widespread attention from the press at the time, the bold resolutions of the organizers about the participation of runners from abroad began to be fulfilled.

It probably won't surprise anyone that even then these ideas ran into limited financial possibilities. For example, they had to renounce the participation of the Italian Romeo Bertini, who, in addition to a 2nd class train ride and accommodation, also demanded pocket money. During the year, Karol Halla took part in a race in Budapest, and on this occasion the local athletics union promised him the participation of two Hungarian runners, and the Austrians announced that they could start a year later. The first fundamental change in 1925, in addition to the effort for international participation, was the preparation of a new course. It already led in the direction of Seňa, but the turn was marked before this village, while runners also accumulated the necessary kilometers on the roads around Šebastovce and Čaňa.

Finally, on October 28, just after noon, 21 runners lined up at the start, among them the Hungarian Pál Király, a participant at the Olympics in Paris. If at today's marathons we always see cyclists during the organizing work on the track, know that this is nothing new. In Košice that year, they assigned two to each runner. Kiraly didn't let them rest; he didn't even rely on chance, and he already confirmed at the first intervals that he would not find a more serious opponent in the field. With his winning time of 2:41:55, he broke the existing Hungarian record by eight minutes, and after the end-of-year assessment, he was able to learn that he had achieved the seventh best world performance of the year. Statisticians recorded a total of 135 performances in races on three continents in 1925, but among them only 11 were from Košice. The reason was prosaic - up to a dozen runners withdrew from the second-year course. Among them, somewhat surprisingly, was the first winner Karol Halla.

And another tradition was introduced which persists in certain forms to this day. At the festive dinner at the Slovan Hotel, all participating runners received a commemorative plaque.

Josef Malý reached the finish line in 1925 in third place.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

Among other things, the history of radio broadcasting in Slovakia began to be written in Košice.

Local postal technicians and officials had carried out the first successful trial transmission at the end of 1925, more precisely between December 20 and 22, from the radiotelegraph and radiotelephone exchange in Haniska, near Košice.

At the time, there was no suitable equipment in eastern Slovakia, and therefore it was necessary to adapt the transmitter, originally intended for controlling air traffic on the route Prague-Košice-Moscow, for radio broadcasting.

1926 GUESTS FROM BERLIN

The third year of the marathon attracted 36 competitors from 4 countries to the start.

And had it not been for unexpected complications, there could have been more flags raised over Košice. The efforts of the organizers to ensure the best possible competition were obvious. The German Paul Hempel, perhaps the best runner in Central Europe at that time, arrived from Berlin; Austrian Simon Woisk was present, and there were no questions about the participation of the Hungarians at that time. However, there were several unlucky moments during the preparation of the race. A missed train in Vienna meant that the Italian runner Malvicini could not battle for the championship, so the first start of a competitor from the Apennine Peninsula had to wait in Košice. Until 1947, surprisingly enough.

With the growing ambitions of the organizers and their efforts to improve the quality of the entire event, expenses also increased, of course. This led to the decision to collect voluntary contributions also from the spectators, of whom, according to contemporary sources, perhaps as many as 15,000 gathered along the course.

The athletes set out on the rain-marked course at noon, each with a personal seconder, moving alongside their runner on a bicycle or motorcycle. Hempel, followed by Hungarian Pál Király, the winner from 1925, set the sharpest pace. However, he was not strong enough in the end and had to settle for third place more than eight minutes behind the winner. In the end, up to a third of the runners did not finish the race. However, this was not the case for only 20-year-old Košice resident Ľudovít Apagyi. With a time of 3:16:36, he took a flattering 6th place as the best competitor from the local club. And if your admiration while reading these lines was due to his young age in addition to his performance, know that as many as six of his 23 rivals were even younger.

Mud and cold accompanied the 36 competitors on the course, which was changed again. This time, however, almost definitively, because the marathoners, with few exceptions, met with with the turnaround in Seňa until 1988.

In 1926, the leader Paul Hempel really had enough organizers and curious people around him.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

The development of public transport in the city was also significantly boosted by the opening of a new tram line, on which the first test runs with passenger cars took place on August 26, 1926.

It led from the railway station along what is now Masaryková Street to Marathon Square, Kuzmány Square, Štúrova Square, Liberators Square and back to the station. The track, marked as line no. 3, was restored to its original length in the early 1950s, but today only memories remain of it in this form.

1927 HELLO, THE MARATHON IS CALLING

The marathon was getting ready for its fourth installment.

The previous year had brought another breakthrough, when every podium position belonged to a different country. And so it is no wonder that the propositions for the year 1927 were already printed in five different languages, so that the invitation to Košice could be understood even in the truly wide world.

Everyone was pleased and encouraged by the fact that this year, for the first time, the race also received the Czechoslovak championship stamp. According to contemporary sources, the previous ones were held in Hradec Králové in 1926. The championship and the title of national champion were won there by Alois Krof, who was also present in Košice in 1927. However, this did not change the situation that the defending champion German Paul Hempel from the still existing Berlin club SC Charlottenburg was rightly considered the biggest favorite. And maybe Pál Király, the Hungarian winner of the marathon from 1925, next to him. In a race marked mainly by thick fog, however, a surprise finally emerged. József Galambos, then 27 years old, saw to it. The referees could report on his actions, but also on all intermediate times in the leading group, thanks to an unprecedented innovation - telephone stations installed along the track by members of the then Košice military garrison.

As it turned out later, the victory of Galambos was a surprise only at first glance. This short athlete later became an unattainable record holder among men in terms of the number of Košice championships. He won it a total of four times, successively in 1928, 1932 and 1933. And in the last of those triumphs, he also achieved his fastest time ever in Košice with a performance of 2:37:53.2. And who won the aforementioned first title of champion of Czechoslovakia awarded in Košice? It was defense attorney Alois Krof who, wearing the Sparta Praha jersey, finished first among domestic competitors. Right behind the victorious Galambos.

Interest in the marathon event was enormous from the beginning. This is what the thick rows of spectators waiting for the runners looked like in 1927 in the immediate vicinity of the National Theater building.

On the way back to Košice, the racers sometimes got lost in the thick fog. However, the marathon itself was not lost. For the first time, propositions were issued in five languages before its start.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

Starting in 1923, the Prague company Rádiojournal was the holder of the monopoly rights for radio broadcasting in Czechoslovakia. The successful broadcast attempts in previous years led to a second branch being set up in Košice, also due to the sufficient background of cultural institutions.

Regular broadcasting in the city began on April 17, 1927, in the modest conditions of a makeshift studio at Poštová Street 12. There was a broadcast every evening from 7:30 p.m. to 10:00 p.m., and on Sundays in the morning. The program included lectures, radio plays, live music and singing.

1928 MISSING INVITATIONS

Another Olympic year came and Vojtech Bukovský was also nominated to Amsterdam as a referee.

He tried his hand at the Games four years before, and we all know that it was at the Olympics in Paris that he fell in love with the idea of organizing something spectacular in his hometown.

He traveled to the land of tulips, of course, armed with his own ambitions and experience from organizing a marathon, so he used his stay to invite the best runners to Košice. And there would be plenty to choose from in Amsterdam, because the Olympic champion himself, the Frenchman El Ouafi, and his rivals achieved really excellent times. Bukovský received several promises, but the officials of the Czechoslovak Athletic Union later somehow forgot to issue written invitations, which at that time was a necessary administrative condition in order to continue the event. That is why the organizers from Košice had to manage the starting field almost by themselves.

In sunny weather, competitors from four countries took to the track on October 28, 1928, and no one was very surprised that last year's winner, József Galambos from Hungary, took the fast pace, indicating a finish time of under 2:40. He wasn't far from the record intermediate time, not even at the turnaround point, but the second half of the race was significantly slower. And when he repelled the last attack of his opponents at the 35th km, no one could prevent him from defending his championship.

František Zyka from Prague made a big jump in performance into third place. Compared to the start in 1927, he improved by more than 40 minutes.

Quite a few members of the Košice military garrison also stood at the start. It is not known whether as part of the physical training given by an order, or out of a natural interest and passion for running. The truth is that among those who did not finish the marathon in Košice that year, the names of these soldiers are represented in large numbers.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

An important undertaking was the project of the new fire brigade barracks, the construction of which was completed in 1928.

They were built in the southern part of the city and served the Košice voluntary fire brigade, which at that time already had 26 members. At that time, the fire brigade was equipped with cars as well as motor and hand sprayers, and all of this had to be concentrated in suitable premises.

The vast complex, built on to the designs of Ludovít Oelschläger, was the most modern in the republic at the time of its construction. Downstairs there were garages for fire trucks, above which the bedrooms were connected to the ground floor with typical climbing poles, and there were also offices, a dining room and a gym.

1929 THE VETERAN GÖTTSCHELLING

They quickly got used to the German Paul Hempel in Košice. He also came in 1929, for the fourth time, although at that time not knowing that it would be the last time.

In the dressing room, he again dressed in the jersey of the SC Charlottenburg club, which we have already mentioned in previous chapters. Now let's add that half a century later, in 1974, its members also stood at the birth of the now famous and world record-winning marathon in Berlin.

Hempel was ready to add another Košice title to his victory in 1926 and the bronze that followed. No wonder, because this athlete, to whom the first name Hans is attributed in some sources, was among the narrowest European elite at that time. Already in 1910, when he was only twenty, we find his name and time under 3 hours in the record of the marathon in Frankfurt. Later, he did not miss national records, the title of champion of Germany or a start at the Olympics in Amsterdam.

In the dry weather on October 28, 1929, Hempel initially let his opponents run ahead of him by quite a bit, but apparently aware of his form, he did not panic and finally won the race convincingly with almost a minute's lead. At the same time, it was a marathon in which, for the first time in Košice that no Czechoslovak athlete placed in the top three.

And one more interesting thing can be discovered by flipping through the results list from 1929. Hempel's compatriot Hugo Göttschling also completed his marathon premiere in Košice. His age was especially interesting, as he was almost 62 years old, which was certainly not common at that time. To this day, he is the holder of an unsurpassed record. None of the previous participants of the marathon in Košice was born earlier than Göttschling. Next to his name, we see the date November 28, 1867 entered in the register.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

On May 5, 1929, a 4.2 m high bronze statue of General Milan Rastislav Štefánik was installed on Hlavná Street at the initiative of the Association of East Slovak Academicians.

The monument, created by sculptor Jozef Pospíšil and architect Emil Belluš, representing Štefánik in uniform with a scroll of diplomatic documents in his right hand, had to be transported to Prešov in 1938 after the Vienna Arbitration and was returned to its original location on May 6, 1945. But in 1957, the statue was definitively removed and later, unfortunately, also melted down.

And one more tradition was started in 1929 in Košice. The first edition of the Košice-Tatry-Košice cycling race took place, which later became the oldest multi-stage race in the former Czechoslovakia.

For the seventh year, the marathon said goodbye to the KAC stadium, located close to the former Košice Gajdová spa, now a place known as Anička park, and moved its main tent to today's Watsonova Street, where already then was a stadium used alternately by football players and athletes.

Even at that time, the organizers were already "looking" for the best runners of the age, so the Czech endurance runner Oskar Hekš, second at the September marathon in Vienna, ended up in the search results. The demands of his Hagibor club were beyond standard for the time, including a 2nd class ticket, meals and other related expenses. The organizers acquiesced, but in the end they were disappointed when the Ministry of National Defense itself banned him from starting, as he was a soldier of the basic service.

In addition to the two-time winner József Galambos, Latvian champion Artur Motmillers, for whom it was his first start in Košice and whom the spectators would then see at the start until 1937, began to fit into the role of favorite. And he started excellently, as the first at the 10-kilometer mark in an intermediate time of 37:03. However, it was Galambos who soon overtook him, and the referees noted him down as the leading competitor 12 kilometers before the finish line. In the end, however, for reasons not entirely known, he did not finish the race.

The path to the first place was thus opened for his compatriot István Zelenka, bronze medalist from the previous sixth edition of the Slovak International Marathon, because that is what this race was called at the time. In addition to the results themselves, the chroniclers managed to record the inclement weather, muddy roads with puddles of water and reportedly up to 15,000 spectators along the course. In a city, which, according to contemporary sources, was inhabited by a little more than 70,000 citizens at that time.

In the group of runners, 22-year-old Vojtech Deutsch stands fifth from the left. He stood at the start of the marathon for the first time in 1925, then five more times. He didn't have time for more. He died in 1943 in a labor battalion in Alexejovka. His wife and three children died in Auschwitz.

A novelty was the joint start of domestic and foreign competitors, who previously ran with a time gap. The referees suddenly had less to worry about.

The stout figure of marathon co-founder Antonin Zikmund stands out in the middle of the group of organizers.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

The years of the first Czechoslovak Republic marked a period of architectural and urban flourishing for Košice.

The city became a regional administrative and military metropolis with many employees who also demanded solutions for their housing. In addition to residential buildings, however, other really impressive buildings were also built in that period. The complex which today houses the Main Post Office and the building of the Slovak Radio was built precisely in the years 1927-1930.

At the same time, the postal building is considered to be the first Slovak public building created in the decent lines of Functionalist architecture. And in 1930, the very interesting building of the Chamber of Commerce and Industry in Košice was handed over for use at the corner of Hlavná and Bačiková Streets.

When, on Wednesday, October 28, 1931, the runners set off on the race course in the afternoon, no one knew at that moment that it would be one of the most memorable years of the entire history of the marathon up to that point.

Juan Carlos Zabala, a barely 20-year-old Argentine youth, was responsible for this. His start was arranged in one of the Viennese hotels by Vojtech Bukovský and Zabala's coach Alexander Stirling, an Austrian with Czech roots.

Bukovsky, probably confirmed by the Argentinian's world record in the 30 km run, set on October 10 in Vienna, insisted on his start and did well. However, Zabala had never run a marathon before, and the fans claimed with all seriousness that either the course itself or the coming cold and unfriendly weather would eliminate him. It was because of this that he was shaking like a leaf in the dressing room by the stove before the start. No wonder, the thermometer didn't even rise to six degrees Celsius. However, the black-haired young man surprised everyone immediately after the start. He set a high pace, got rid of his rivals and was rewarded at the finish line with a course record improved by almost 10 minutes, which stood until the later victory of the Swede Leandersson in 1950.

The doubters continued to sound off even after the race, telling everyone to learn to measure time better. Their mouths were later closed only by Zabala himself, who in August of the following year won the Olympic gold in Los Angeles in a new Games record of 2:31:36.

And what else can be added to 1931? It was said to be so foggy that the referees sometimes doubted whether Zabala had lost his way somewhere, not believing that he could run so fast. Rushing off the track, they caught up with him by car maybe 200 m before the finish line. And the fact that life flowed at an apparently calmer pace in those days is also evidenced by Zabala's stay in Košice until until November 8. And he was not idle. In a hastily organized race, he was trying to break the world record for a one-hour run. It didn't work out, but the young Argentinian has already remained permanently inscribed in the hearts of the people of Košice. For a long time, everyone was reminded of him by the shouts of the fans along the track. They chanted "Pace Zabala" for years!

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY

In the years 1928 – 1931, on the design of Prague architect prof. František Sander, the generous building of the new Košice police headquarters was realized.

The extensive building with a square floor plan has a closed courtyard in the middle. The reader may be interested in the fact that it was built in the place where the history of football in Košice began to be written. It was here in 1905 that the Košice Athletic Club, of which marathon founder Vojtech Bukovský was a member, opened the first own field serving not only for football but for other sports, too. Well, the building on today's Moyzesová Street still serves the police forces today.

1932 THE THIRD, BUT NOT THE LAST

The event of the year was undoubtedly the Olympic Games in Los Angeles, in order only second on the American continent.

And the organizers from Košice must have felt elated when they heard that their last year's hero, the crowd favorite Argentinian Zabala, had won the gold far overseas. Even so, he forever silenced the haters who questioned his victory the previous year, his record time and the regularity of the entire race.

News from the Olympics stopped filling the pages of newspapers, and by the end of the summer, everyone had to get to work. Even for the ninth year of the marathon, the most skilled tried to ensure the strongest possible competition. And on the whole successfully, when they finally managed to get Oskar Hekš from Prague, the eighth place finisher from the already mentioned Olympics, and alongside him the winner of the marathon in Vienna, Jaroslav Žofka, or the recent champion of Germany, Heinrich Brauch. But even that was not enough to write a new name in the chronicle of champions. Above the strength of the entire 42-man starting field was once again József Galambos, who could not be overlooked in those days. At the end of the day, he scored his third Košice victory.

Meanwhile, the organizers gradually introduced more and more novelties. In 1932, for example, it was the complete closing of the marathon course, the announcement of the team competition and also the first awarding of the category for older runners. At that time, of course, there were not as many as there are today.

The results say that the oldest was 48-year-old Antal Lovas from Budapest. And preserved sources remind us that the interest in the Košice marathon event was really great at that time. This is also evidenced by the live radio broadcast covering the course of the races for listeners on the territory of Slovakia and Transcarpathian Ukraine, which was part of Czechoslovakia at the time.

The author managed to create an architecturally exceptionally clean, artistically, spatially and structurally imaginative complex, also known in the press of the time under the name "Masaryk's Colony". Today, this district, located in the wider center of Košice, also referred to as Little Prague, is one of the most sought-after places to live.

1933 HE HOPPED ON A BIKE AND RAN

Runners from Germany, who until now had been participating every year, were missing, as the social climate there changed after Hitler's rise to power and the country was going through a relatively turbulent period. The starter counted 33 runners before his shot, and the finish judge later recorded two fewer runners in the score sheet. Near its end was one 22-year-old Ľudevít Majoroš who was finished in the penultimate place. He would then return to this course for years to come, albeit with larger breaks. The last time was 58 years after his premiere. And for that long time, amazingly, he didn't lose much of his performance. Know that at the end of his marathon journey, at the age of 79, he achieved a performance of 4:31:11, which was just 30 minutes more than we find in the records of his youth.

But let's go back to the favorites. Perhaps the biggest chances were given to Josef Šulca. His second place in the marathon in Vienna, which was held a little more than a month before the one in Košice, predisposed him to this.

The runners on the course to Seňa didn't give away anything from the start, and at the finish line they lined up exactly according to their position in the world rankings from 1932. The favored Josef Šulc had to settle for third place, and you can guess who, after an even race, won with a decisive lead in the end. None other than József Galambos, already seasoned and almost unbeatable on this course. He thus credited his fourth victory to his account, and so far no one else has been able to repeat that in Košice.

József Vass from Szeged, Hungary, finished in 13th place. His desire to start was really great, but neither his home club nor the Košice organizers could provide him with money for the trip. He solved the problem in his own way. He came to Košice by bicycle. We will probably never find out how long it took him, but the readers' admiration will probably increase even more if we add that the road distance between the two cities is today still more than 400 kilometers.

Josef Šulc, wearing number 9, is chasing Galambos. In vain. He lost almost five minutes to him at the finish line.

Even in those years, the marathon was not only a man's affair. There were even ladies dressed in stylish coats preparing refreshments on the course.

This time there were also members of the army at the start. Private Doležal from the 14th Košice Battalion did the best of them. Unfortunately, his first name was not preserved, but we know that it belonged to him at the finish line 24th place and time 3:42:38.

In 1933, 22-year-old Košice Ľudevít Majoroš also appeared on the course for the second time. He ran second to last, but persevered. We also come across him in the 1997 results of the MMM half marathon.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

In 1933, the Orthodox synagogue with the adjacent Jewish school on Puškinová Street also began to serve its purpose.

The synagogue, which represents a unique combination of historical elements with elements of modernity and oriental architecture, was the only one of several that served its purposes continuously. The indisputable benefit of the whole solution was the advanced heating of the building, even at that time. The hot air ducts cleverly led through the basement opened directly in the floor through circular openings with a decorative cast-iron cover and in the slanted window sills with small rectangular vents covered with a decorative grid.

1934 FINANCIAL TROUBLES

Even ten years after its creation, the marathon could not break free from financial troubles and deficits, which are repeatedly pointed out in their statements to the club's accountants.

To make matters worse, the people around the marathon in 1934 also had to fight hard against the ever-present bureaucracy. Only after a lot of effort did they finally get permission to close the road towards Barca and Seňa. At that time, the track was measured in such a way that the last 4,100 meters were run on the stadium track. Even with such a step, the organizers wanted to attract more paying spectators to its tribunes and improve their small budget a bit. It is not known how they succeeded in the end, but satisfaction could have reigned at least from the gradual expansion of foreign competition. The premier participation of a competitor from Finland also contributed to this. He was then 33-year-old Ilmari Kuokka, a participant in the Olympics in Amsterdam, who finally took home the bronze medal from Košice. Josef Šulc, who was already favored the previous year, won the championship, starting again this time in the Sparta Prague jersey. During the race, however, his rivals took turns at the front. Gradually Motmillers, Galambos or the just mentioned Kuokka. Šulc didn't let any of them shake him off and in the end, after a good tactical performance, he didn't give the obviously tired Galambos any chance.

If we check to see how this looked in 1934 for the other lists, we see an incredible dominance of runners from Japan. In the world's first ten, they occupied up to nine places, while their achievements were collected exclusively at home. They succeeded in five different marathons organized this year in the land of the rising sun. Well, Tamao Shiaku found himself in the limelight. He recorded a time of 2:32:56 when he won in Osaka.

For ice hockey, which has been developing in Košice since the 1920S, the year 1934 also appears to be significant.

It was during this time that news about an exceptional player from the metropolis of the east began to spread throughout the republic. He was Ladislav Troják. In the same year, he became a member of the LTC Prague team and later, in 1936, he became the first Slovak to play in the national team at the Olympic tournament. After the war, he won the first world championship title in 1947 for Czechoslovakia, but tragically died a year later in a plane crash over the English Channel. Today we find the name of Ladislav Troják in the name of the winter stadium in Košice, where his followers play.

1935 BATTLE FOR BERLIN

The marathon in Košice in October 1935 was one of the last opportunities to meet the limit necessary for participation in the Olympics in Berlin.

Places on the podium and the mentioned limit were fought for in bad weather and on wet, slippery, often not yet fully paved roads. The final 2 kilometers then took place directly at the stadium, where the competitors completed the last 5 circuits. Here, the runner Latvian Malejko struggled the most for a long time in the leading group, finally reaching the finish line with all his might in only seventh place. His compatriot Artūrs Motmillers was less worried. At his fifth start in Košice, the then 35-year-old athlete dealt with all his opponents rather unambiguously and, in addition to a valuable victory, opened the door to the already mentioned start at the upcoming Olympics.

If we take a look there for a moment, we find that a year later, in addition to Motmillers, bronze finisher Ludovic Gáll and Josef Šulc also appeared in the German capital from the Košice starting field. However, Šulc did not finish the marathon in Košice after withdrawing at the 30th kilometer.

In 1935, domestic runners did not reach the top places, although only 21-year-old Andrej Mahely from KAC Košice did not escape attention. With a time of 3:13:42, he took the 16th place, and we can only assume how he would have progressed if later war events had not affected his fate. Although he returned to the marathon, his last performance in Košice dates back to 1948, but he did not achieve more impressive results.

The accompanying program also continued to expand, in which the organizers in 1935 included a well-attended 5,000-meter track race. The good results and responses from the marathon were marred only by news that the overall management of the organizing club, which was the already mentioned KAC, did not turn out the best again.

1936 SAVED SEASON

In 1936, the next Olympic cycle was completed, and so in the summer there was competition at the games in Berlin. About their background, marked in many ways especially by Hitler's ideology, a lot has already been described.

The marathon runners themselves started in Berlin on August 9. Among them, the Košice champion from 1931 and the defender of gold from Los Angeles, Argentine Juan Carlos Zabala. But his ambitions did not come true in the end. Still, before that, he took a decent place in the 10,000 m run, finishing in 6th place, but during the marathon, he withdrew from the race on which he had concentrated the most. That is why, after the end of the Olympics, there was talk for a while about his repeated start in Košice. But from this intention, it is not known why, it finally came to fruition.

The Olympic dream did not come true even for the Austrian György Balaban. An illness prevented him from participating, so he decided to save the season by starting in the east of Slovakia. And he did well. German Hermann Helber was still ahead at the turnaround point, but he slowed down significantly in the second part of the race, so Balaban, who managed his forces better, won with a lead of more than 4 minutes. And it should be added that at the age of 23 he was the youngest competitor in the entire starting field. However, the events of the following years were not very favorable to the sport, and this was certainly the reason why this talented athlete gradually disappeared from the cross-country courses and score sheets. If in 1936 the youngest enjoyed the victory in Košice, then at the opposite end of the results list we also find the oldest. Hugo Göttsschling, then 69, was also mentioned in previous chapters. His story seems to indicate that this sport will one day largely belong to veterans as well.

And at that time, the marathon influenced the sporting events in the city in wider contexts. Thanks to increasingly active international contacts, boxers, cyclists, fencers and wrestlers gradually traveled to Košice from abroad for their competitions.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY

The municipal swimming pool was completed in 1936 in the area between the railway station and the center of Košice. Simple functionalist forms purposefully connected two pools at different heights with a partially covered tribune, which had the form of a simple colonnade. The swimming pool was, and still is, an integral part of life in Košice.

The year 1936 was also significant for Košice in other ways. A member of Košice's Sokol also performed in gymnastics competitions at the Olympics in Berlin. She was Matylda Pálfyová, and she became the first ever Slovak woman to win an Olympic medal. She won silver in the team all-around.

► GENEROUS LERICHE

On that day, Sunday, October 28, 1937, only one name bowed down after the race – Desiré Leriche. And it is still inflected today.

This member of the ECB Montreuil Athletics Club, a gardener by profession, arrived in Košice only thanks to a collection for a train ticket organized for him by his friends in Paris. He rewarded them with victory, but he did not forget to help either. When giving out autographs after the victory in Košice, right on the field at Barčianska class, he asked people to pay a small amount for each signature, so that in the end he donated the entire amount collected to local poverty. Even then, with such a gesture, he proved that sport is accompanied by the sincerest emotions, often leading to the much-needed sympathy with the neediness of others.

The news of his triumph also reached home, where he received another honor upon his return. The French Minister of Physical Education, Léo Lagrange, presented him with a high award in recognition of his victory in what at the time was already a prestigious marathon.

Let's add that the name of Leriche is still associated with the only Košice victory by a runner from the land of the Gallic Rooster.

In 1937, the Swedish tinsmith Shoore Johnsson also showed a great will to start in Košice. After a journey lasting 64 hours, he arrived in the city only 3 hours before the starting gun. Even so, he still had enough energy to place in the top ten with a time of 2:57:26.

The fact that the organizers were already raising money for the marathon as much as possible, also thanks to advertising, is also shown by period advertisements in the printed program bulletin. In one of them, the advertisers from the spas in Piešťany also write about how "the stiff muscles and veins of athletes relax in their mud baths". And they boast a few high-profile clients right away. Among them is the name of Australian tennis player and Grand Slam champion John Crawford.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

The roots of higher technical education in Košice date back to 1937, when Act No. 170 Coll. of 25 June 1937 led to the founding of the State Technical College of Dr. Milan Rastislav Štefánik. Teaching was supposed to start already in the 1938/39 school year, but pre-war events after the Vienna Arbitration forced officials to act differently. First, it was moved to Prešov, then to Martin, until the whole plan was transformed into the foundations of today's Slovak Technical University in Bratislava.

THEY DIDN'T WANT TO BELIEVE

One of the saddest chapters of the marathon in Košice is linked with the year 1938. But let's keep things in order.

At the end of September, i.e., a month before the start of the 15th year, the organizers received applications from competitors from 16 countries. At the same time, however, rapidly changing political events began to fundamentally affect people's lives in a large part of Europe. The infamous Munich Agreement of the world powers broke the integrity of the territory of Czechoslovakia, so fears about further developments led the Košice organizers to the difficult decision not to organize the marathon. Nobody wanted to believe it at that moment. And although telegrams were sent to the registered runners' addresses about the cancellation of the marathon, several of them showed up in Košice the day before the start, traditionally scheduled for October 28. They got off the trains at the railway station in the belief that the marathon, for which they were looking forward to and conscientiously preparing, would take place after all. And although even according to these testimonies, it can be seen that the message of marathon thoughts and desires was unmistakable even in 1938, the runners finally did not reach the city streets. Instead of them, the troops of Horthy's Hungary entered Košice on November 11.

However, running events did not completely disappear from Košice that year. A few weeks later, according to several contemporary accounts, a large-scale relay race took place, filling the city center with figures of athletes in their team jerseys. In a certain parallel, a situation not dissimilar to the one 20 years before arose. At that time, in distant Boston, at the end of the First World War, they had no winner of the marathon. In the continuity and counting the years of the oldest marathon in the world, they included, as later Košice did, relay races composed only of soldiers of the American army.

The year 1938 thus brought a dark age to a large part of the world. But even that, despite all the tragedies and hardships, could not smother the marathon fire in Košice.

- ▶ The marathon was prepared, but did not take place due to the events preceding World War II. In late autumn, only relay races were held.

The commemorative card and printed race proposals testify that in 1938 everything was prepared in detail in Košice.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY

On the occasion of the celebration of the 20th anniversary of the establishment of Czechoslovakia, the Eastern Czechoslovakia Land Exhibition was held in Košice from July 15 to September 4, 1938. It was the first large general exhibition in Slovakia and was supposed to present the transformations of the region under the conditions of the first republic. During the design of the main exhibition pavilions, such structural and layout solutions had to be created that would enable the pavilions to be transformed into objects for the emerging university with minimal modifications.

The Vienna Arbitration, announced on November 2, 1938, meant that Košice was attached to the Kingdom of Hungary. A few days later, on November 11, Horthy's army entered the city; which it then occupied in various forms until the end of the war.

1939 ▶ HEADED BY HERNÁDI

Only a month after the invasion of Poland and the real outbreak of war in Europe, in a much gloomier atmosphere than years before, 39 runners stood at the start of the marathon in Košice. Most were from Košice and nearby Hungary, to which the city itself, as well as other parts of Slovak territory, were attached after the sadly known redrawing of the borders.

The race, still advertised under the patronage of the local club KAC 1903, was prepared by a significantly changed organizing committee. It was headed by Mihaly Hernádi, a civilian doctor armed with his own running background. The athletes, in a truncated competition, set out exactly at noon on the well-known course to Seňa, and until their return, footballers took their place in the stadium, as usual. More precisely, the players of the home team KAC Košice and the visiting team BVSC Budapest.

Looking at the start list, we see that József Kiss was among the runners for the second time, after his debut in 1937. He literally outclassed his rivals on Sunday, October 1, 1939, and was at the finish line more than 11 minutes earlier than the second-placed Sándor Liptai. At this point, we can reveal that Kiss then remained faithful to this marathon until 1958, and a total of 16 Košice starts are recorded in the statistics today under his name. It is also interesting that this participant of the first post-war Olympics in London was able to show improvement, even significantly, even at the end of his career. This is evidenced by the fact that he achieved his best performance in Košice, a time of 2:36:05, only in 1954, i.e., at the age of 45.

In the picture, we see him with start number 5 before the start in 1925. Next to him, we also recognize some other multiple participants of this period. Hernádi, or Herzsenyák, if you prefer, entered the results list in Košice a total of three times, namely in 1925, 1926 and 1927.

Hernádi was not only an enthusiastic athlete, but also a doctor, bacteriologist and virologist. He tried to help outside his profession, including people who were threatened with wartime deportations.

After the occupation of Košice, the east of the republic lost one of the best equipped airports.

The Hungarian army quite naturally decided to use the conveniently located airport to train its pilots. That is why the Miklós Horthy Aviation Academy was founded here on March 31, 1939, and the ceremonial opening of its activity took place on November 5, 1939. At the same time, the building of this academy on today's Komenského Street, also known as the former Cadet, was put into use. Attendees of the pilot training also used the space of the so-called Old Airport and the ČSA station building, which still stands today in its original location on Južná trieda Street.

1940 MOVING TO PEST

If the world had not been torn apart by war in 1940, we could only write about the changes described here in the marathon as a useless and unsuccessful experiment.

The context was more complex. It has already been mentioned that after the Vienna Arbitration, the breakup of Czechoslovakia and the redrawing of the borders, Košice came under the administration of Hungary. Of course, all of this had to be reflected in the events surrounding the marathon.

Already the year before, Mihály Hernádi became its leader. He was quite well oriented, because in the years 1925 – 1927 he conquered the course in Košice three times in total, even under the original surname of Herzsenyák. He became the head of the organization in 1939, but perhaps even he was surprised by the decision of the then authorities to move the marathon to Budapest in 1940. Today, when we have already experienced several cases of moving the dates or venues of important events, most recently during the COVID pandemic, such an act would perhaps not raise so many questions, but in 1940, no one could have guessed where these steps were actually going. It may be assumed that the intention was to combine the marathon with the Hungarian athletics championships on the track and thus have both championships in one place.

With the passage of time, we can say that based on the makeup of the runners' field as well as the composition of the organizing team, there were clear links to the previous events in Košice. The course stretched from Budapest to Szentendre and back; 29 runners started, and 27 of them successfully reached the finish line, among them four-time Košice winner József Galambos. József Kiss won the race with a time of 2:36:10.6 hours, but after the race, the contemporary press mentioned that when compared to the level of the marathon in Košice, the one in Budapest was not very successful. And so on October 12, 1941, a year after this experiment and a kind of special hosting, the competition again took place in eastern Slovakia.

On September 30, newspaper pages were filled with information about Kiss's marathon victory, describing his fight with Mucsi, Gyetvai, Csonka, Nagyvári and Mauréry.

At the start of the last endurance run of the season, which was set out on a long course of 25 km, thirty runners lined up in November 1940 in Budapest. József Kiss, the winner of the marathon on September 29, was also present.

These shorter distances also showed Kiss's quality. On the race course here just behind Gáll.

Lonely Galambos. This time he did not have enough to be the best.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY

The Homeland Museum, the name at that time for today's East Slovak Museum, which mapped all the important aspects of the life of Eastern Slovakia, changed its name to the Upper Hungary Rákóczi Museum.

Along with these changes, quite a few new activities were added. Excavations rich in finds were also carried out from 1940 in the grounds of the Katova Bastion, in Mlynské Nahon and in the underground of the Mikluš Prison. At the same time, it was structurally restored and modified into a new museum exhibition presenting some chapters of the history of Košice. The exposition itself was then made available in 1942.

So, after an unsuccessful attempt to move the marathon to Budapest, the race was returned to Košice in 1941, but the number of runners at the start was really low. In the end, only 15 of them made it to the finish line, the fewest since 1925.

Mikuláš Hernádi, the chief county physician already mentioned several times, continued as the head of the organizers. And we also know that he knew the course and the background of the marathon well even as a competitor. Of his three starts, the one in 1927 was perhaps the most successful, when he finished seventh overall with a time of 3:05:03. According to contemporary sources, during the war, in addition to his work in the medical environment and the organization of the marathon, Hernádi also tried somehow to mitigate the wartime deportations that began in 1944. Those deportations that so deeply and permanently marked the life and modern history of Košice and the whole of Slovakia.

Apart from the results and records of the cold weather, when the temperature reached only 4 °C at noon, not much other information has been preserved about the race itself, which was held on October 12, 1941. Only the winner József Gyimesi, with a time under three hours, managed somewhat surprisingly to beat József Kiss, who was dominant in those years in Košice. In 1941, Július Závodný completed the aforementioned innumerable list of results. We then find him in our marathon records up to 1952 and, after a very long pause, even in the memorable year of 1968. But that time, however, he did not finish the race within the time limit.

József Gyimesi (22) was one of the smaller runners in the starting field with his subtle figure. Apparently, it was not a handicap for him.

Mauréry was among the traditional participants of the Košice marathon. He was greeted at the finish line a total of 6 times.

Kiss confirmed its performance for a long time. However, in Košice in 1941, he was "only" second place. This old photo captures him in 1945 when he won the Budapest Marathon.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

On June 26, 1941, just after noon, three twin-engine bombers appeared in the airspace of Košice, heading south. They circled undisturbed for some time and then began to bombard the city in low flight. A total of 29 bombs fell on Košice; more than 20 buildings were destroyed, but no military targets were hit. The attack claimed 29 lives and wounded 62. The anti-aircraft defense could not identify the exact type of aircraft or their distinguishing features. There are still disputes about the identity of the bombers, but it was most likely a staged Russian bombing by Germany.

The year was also interesting with the introduction of right-hand automobile traffic in Košice, starting at three o'clock in the morning on July 6, 1941.

1942 ONE-FIFTH IN KOŠICE

Of course, the war years were not very good for sports, and therefore not for the marathon.

In 1942, statisticians worldwide recorded a total of only 152 performances achieved on regular marathon courses. Of that, perhaps a little surprising for some, more than one-fifth, 33 to be exact, were in Košice. This proves that, despite all the circumstances, it was possible to organize the marathon even in these difficult times.

It should be mentioned that in 1942 the marathon was already held on September 13, so the runners had to count on still warm, almost summer weather, unlike the previous year. At noon, the mercury on the thermometer rose to 26 °C, and that also definitely marked the times achieved. None of the runners got under 3 hours, although it was undeniably within the power of several. This can best be demonstrated again in the case of József Kiss. He started in Košice a total of 16 times and only in three cases did he not break the three-hour mark. One of those, apparently due to the weather, was in 1942, but probably more valuable than the time itself was another championship for him. Along with his name, it is also worth mentioning that for his training and racing endurance, he was later rewarded with a nomination for the first post-war Olympics in London in 1948. Out of the total number of 41 runners who competed on the marathon course in the British capital on August 7, he finished in a solid 19th place.

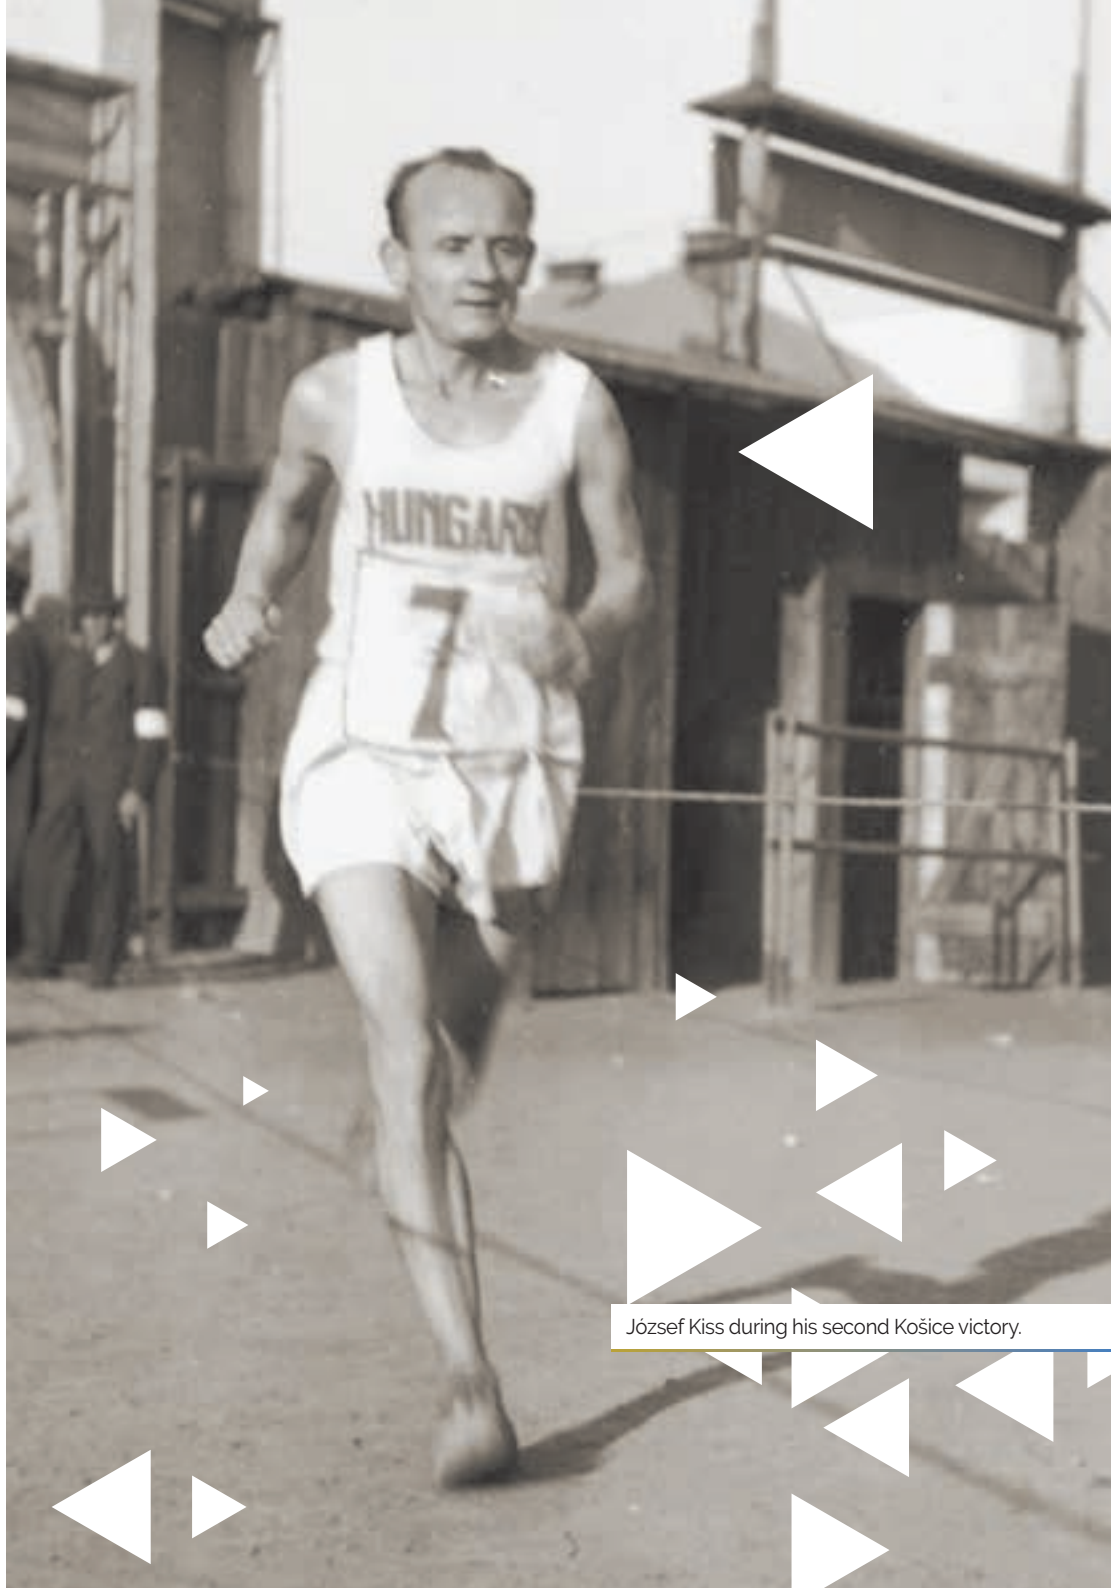

If we go back for a moment to September 13, 1942, upon closer reading we will find that Antal Lovas also started in Košice for the eleventh time. Although he finished last, considering his age, he was 58 years old at the time, it was definitely a remarkable performance.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY <sup>1</sup>

The area was paved with a high quality pavement; tram routes and road communication were defined; lighting was resolved, and in the same year a water fountain, i.e., a fountain with a pool, a machine room and colored lighting, was put into operation. Efforts to provide a comprehensive solution to this extremely valuable area continued even later. A more fundamental change occurred only in connection with the construction of the shopping center. Of course, it was built in this place much later, only in the years 2008-2011.

1943 BATTLE OF NAMESAKES

Even in 1943, events in Košice were still under the influence of the war events.

In the summer of that year, there was even another air attack and bombing of the airport lying in close proximity to the city. Despite all this, the marathon was organized again on September 19th. Contemporary records say that 34 runners reached the finish line, and according to global statistics, this was again the most of all marathons that took place that year on regular courses anywhere in the world.

The marathon in Trenčín in western Slovakia remained below the line, so to speak, in this assessment. It was run here on October 31, 1943, but on a shorter course than was clearly prescribed by the rules in those years. That is why the winning time of Štefan Alkus, which was 2:48:02, cannot be considered regular. Otherwise, this name was not unknown even in Košice. Alkus started regularly in Košice after the end of the war, and he must have remembered the year 1951, when he finished third, most fondly.

In the results from Košice, we can see that the battle for the championship in 1943 was between people with the same surname. Victorious Géza Kiss tried the local course a total of six times, but this performance was clearly his best. He beat another Kiss by exactly one minute, the much better-known József, whom we have mentioned repeatedly in several previous chapters thanks to his performances.

And since there is very little information from 1943, let's return for a moment to a topic that also underlines the uniqueness of Košice and which was already mentioned in this chapter. This is the observance of the prescribed length of the course as approved by the IAAF Congress in 1921. Although the course in Košice was changed fundamentally for various reasons a total of nine times, it was always ensured that it measured 42 km and 195 m. There is more than enough evidence that they didn't bother with this elsewhere. For example, even in Boston in 1956, i.e., 60 years after the founding of this race, the race was run on a track only 40.6 km long.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

Ideas for the establishment of a museum with a scientific and technical theme in Košice gradually date back to 1896.

From the intention to the actual implementation, however, this happened much later. In November 1943, the collections of the Regional Hungarian Technical Museum were made available in Košice, which found a roof over their heads in the operational building of the Košice-Bohumín Railway. The exhibits came from practically all over Europe, and some of them remained in Košice even after the Second World War. This is actually how the starting fund of the later founded Slovak Technical Museum was created.

1944 KOŠICE VS. YONKERS

The war year 1944 was not very rich in sports events.

This, of course, also applied to marathons. Historians have recorded only 18 of them worldwide in 1944, three in America, two each in England, Ireland, Denmark and Sweden, and one each in Australia, Turkey, Spain, Switzerland, Romania and India, in addition to Košice. Among the mentioned American races, the Yonkers Marathon, founded in 1907 near New York, stood out in 1944 for its quality. This event is often compared with Košice due to its history and number of years. In the period 1918-1934, however, it was not held at all, and even during the recent COVID-19 pandemic, the continuity of this marathon was interrupted for two years. What made the Yonkers Marathon so noteworthy in 1944? The performance of Charles Robbins. He not only won this race but also dominated the year-end world tables with a time of 2:40:48.6.

If we go back to the events in Košice, we will see a total of 23 names in the 1944 results list. It was held early, on September 9, and while the tireless and then 60-year-old Antal Lovas was last at the finish line, as in the previous year, Rezső Kóvári, almost half his age, took first place.

Contemporary sources did not preserve much information about the winner, so we will only add that he also started in Košice four years later. However, his much better time of 2:46:11 was only enough for 6th place then due to the stronger competition.

In a broader context, it is good to remember that the marathon was held only 10 days after the outbreak of the Slovak National Uprising, the center of which was Banská Bystrica. And although Košice was annexed to Hungary at that time, these events must have resonated deeply here as well.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

On March 18, 1944, the German army entered the territory of Hungary and this heralded a period of cruel repression and war crimes.

The situation of the Košice Jews has also radically worsened. In April, they were first isolated in several streets declared a ghetto and later moved to the area of the Košice brick factory, where up to 15,000 of them were crammed in. The sadly well-known transports to Auschwitz followed, the first on May 16 and the fifth and last on June 3, 1944. Deportation of Jews to death camps represents one of the most horrific chapters in the history of the city of Košice.

1945 FREEDOM MARATHON

In May, the horror-filled Second World War finally ended and humanity began to look to the future with greater hopes.

Interest in starting in Košice did not take long. Already at the end of July, letters were arriving from Switzerland, Sweden and Hungary, many with questions about whether and when the marathon would be held again in its pre-war form. Enthusiasm reigned, understandably, both among the runners and the organizers. But the preparatory committee, which also met on September 12, had to gradually reduce its excessive ambitions. Especially due to significant financial difficulties, it was decided that this time only domestic competitors will run. And although such an unkind message had to be sent abroad, the wave of international solidarity was indeed great and sincere. So much so that on the same day, October 28, 1945, the Czechoslovak Freedom Marathon was held in Gothenburg, Sweden. And very successfully and interestingly. In addition to a warm message for Košice, the victorious Sven Hakansson also achieved the best world performance of the year with a time of 2:36:37.6.

In Košice, the then strongest local club, ŠK Jednota, was entrusted with the organization itself. It had in its midst several experienced people who had stood many years before at the very birth of the marathon. And it was they who welcomed a total of 42 runners before the start together with enthusiastic spectators at the stadium on Solovjevova Street, today Watsonova Street. At noon, they left the athletic oval after two laps to head south to the turn in Seňa. After that, only Antonín Špiroch from Stará Boleslav dominated the course. The results themselves speak for this, where we can see that he beat the second-place runner by more than six minutes.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY <sup>1</sup>

The escalating terror shortly before the arrival of the front culminated on January 5, 1945, when members of the Arrow Cross Party publicly hanged 12 opponents of the regime, and on January 17, they still managed to shoot another 17 people near the Tahanovce tunnel.

On the morning of January 19, members of the 18th IV Army of the Ukrainian Front entered the city without much fighting. Košice was the first major liberated city in the territory of Czechoslovakia. From January 30, 1945, the Slovak National Council was housed in the building of the Railways Directorate, and from April 3, President Edvard Beneš held office in Jakab's Palace. Two days later, on April 5, 1945, the so-called Košice government program was declared.

1946 WATCH OUT, IT'S SLIPPERY!

After the war, the Scandinavians began to set the tone with marathons in the world. And in Košice, too. Judge for yourself. Over nine years with international participation in this period, Scandinavians won eight times in Košice.

In 1946, such a field of runners gathered in Košice as never before. And proof that this was not just the opinion of the local organizers is a quote from the Swiss newspaper Die Tat, which wrote: "The competition in Košice was much better than two months ago at the European Championships in Oslo."

Thus, the era of northerners began to be written in Košice in 1946, precisely in the northern weather. Ten centimeters of snow fell during the night, and wet flakes were lazily falling from the sky even on the morning of the race.

At the start on the snowy field of Jednoty, even two Finnish European champions were chattering their teeth. Fresh champion Mikko Hietanen and his predecessor Väinö Muinonen. In the end, the first of them waded through the white mush most briskly and without any unnecessary slips. Behind him was also Leandersson, a handsome Swedish man with a rich mane of curls, whose moments of Košice glory awaited him a little later.

And let's mention one more, somewhat curious view of this period. Even though the concept of massive popularity in endurance running came many years later, it can be said that the marathon in Košice in 1946 and 1947 was, so to speak, the most massive in the world. A total of 74 runners reached the finish line in those years. And this primacy, which we could only learn about much later after patient research by statisticians, did not belong to Košice at that time because there was no one to compare it with. You can still find the results of more than 50 marathon runs on all continents from those years in the archives. From Boston, Toronto, through Melbourne, Johannesburg, Osaka to Paris. Even in this context, the post-war status of Košice races looks really convincing.

After the liberation, the offices of the Czechoslovak administration returned to Košice and in 1946 the first post-war parliamentary elections were held in Czechoslovakia.

As in the whole of Slovakia, the Democratic Party won in Košice. In the following years, Košice became one of the most important centers of higher education. In 1946, the University of Agricultural and Forestry Engineering was established here; it was later divided and moved to Zvolen and Nitra. And the State Science Library also connects its beginnings with the establishment of this university. It also started its activity with library funds inherited from the defunct Law Academy.

1947 ONLY ANNOYANCES

The organizers were certainly pleased when they learned that the previous year's winner in Košice, the Finn Mikko Hietanen, is once again at the top of the world charts. His time of 2:30:58 and the associated victory on September 7 got him to this podium 1947 in Stockholm. At the same time, however, they could have guessed that they probably wouldn't see him in Slovakia October again.

The people of Košice were not expecting anything long before this discovery, and they tried to ensure the best possible competition again with diligent correspondence sent to all corners of the world. But what could get complicated, got complicated. The American John Semple lost all his documents in Prague; Charles Heirendt from Luxembourg did not get an entry visa; the Italian Dante missed the train from Vienna... In the end, everything was somehow resolved and those who arrived in Košice, despite all the annoyances, set off on October 28, 1947, in good weather on a well-known course.

The favorite was clearly the British champion Jack Holden, holder of the second best world performance of the year and later European champion. He was still leading at the 25th km, but the previously mentioned Heirendt gradually took over, for whom, according to the chroniclers, it was even a marathon debut. And not just any, but ultimately a victorious one.

An interesting figure in the starting field in 1947 was American John Semple, also running with number seven. The world got to know this man much better exactly 20 years later, when he became a permanent part of the organizing team of the Boston Marathon. And it was he who discovered during that race that Kathrine Switzer, disguised as a man, was also running on the course. The reason for her action was obvious. At that time, the start of women was still prohibited in Boston, and basically in all other marathons in the world. Photos of their fight with each other right on the course went around the world. Semple, trying to fulfill the letter of the issued rules, failed, and collegiate runners protected Kathrine from his intervention, and she finally managed to finish the marathon. An episode that certainly contributed to the later emancipation of running and in which, albeit indirectly, Košice also played its role.

Want to know more? In 1947, Semple reached the finish line in Košice in 24th place in a time of 3:06:47.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

Life in post-war Košice was, of course, also greatly influenced by societal changes and developments in political events. In 1947, Tichomír Brezenský from the Democratic Party, who organized a protest demonstration in the city on November 16 of this year against communist politics and the takeover of power in opposition to the results of last year's parliamentary elections, was the mayor of Košice in 1947.

In 1947, a catastrophic drought also became a serious societal problem. Climatologists described it as five-hundred year drought, when little or no precipitation occurred in the whole of Slovakia. Wells dried up in many places, and the crop of cereals and potatoes at that time was also minimal. Most people were dependent on the rationing system from public sources.

1948 CONVINING GÖSTA

It was still shortly after the war, but the marathon in Košice was again picking up steam.

The February social changes of 1948 seemingly only marginally affected the marathon events, although sports and physical education were gradually included in the joint, newly created structure of the National Front.

Fears that the Olympics in London would bring problems with securing a high-quality starting field were ultimately not confirmed. However, the Košice organizers ultimately did not get to those games in order to contact and invite the runners. Sweden's Gösta Leandersson did not start in London, for some unknown reason. However, it was only good for Košice. His form culminated in the fall. In Karlskog on September 5, he clocked an excellent time of 2:31:12 and thus came to Košice as a clear favorite. And he didn't disappoint these forecasts on October 28, 1948. Already at the 15th kilometer, he was clearly in the lead in the competition of 97 competitors from 13 countries, and he even attacked the course record of the Olympic winner Zabala from Argentina at other measured intermediate times. And although he eventually missed the record, the nearly two-minute lead at the finish line testified to the Swede's dominance.

Leandersson's career could continue to be followed by his fellow pilgrims, because a year later he won the marathon in Boston and in 1950 he claimed his second triumph in Košice. But more on that later.

The patience of the organizers was also tested by Josef Lehečka from Písek in South Bohemia. He was the last one to leave the course at the finish line. He needed 5 hours and 24 minutes to do it.

It is not known how and when the results of the marathon got to his honorary board. This was, according to the customs of the time, composed of influential people of political events. Among them we find names such as Antonín Zápotocký, Vlado Clementis, Viliam Široký and Ludvík Svoboda.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY <sup>1</sup>

If we talk about 1948, nothing can surpass the impact of the events that resulted in the government crisis and the resignation of the ministers on February 25. Based on the new decrees, the Communist Party, headed by Klement Gottwald, took over power. Its members created a People's Militia unit in Košice and even started occupying offices a few days before the nationwide coup itself. It brought not only fundamental changes in public life, but also a great wave of emigration.

The end of the year was also marked by another tragic event. On November 8, 1948, Ladislav Troják, the first Slovak and a Košice native to win the title of world hockey champion, died in a plane crash. Along with five other teammates, he died in a crash over the English Channel on the way to a match in London.

1949 ▶ A SPIRITED ENGINE DRIVER

It seemed that the Northerners intended to continue the conquest of Košice, sending one top runner after another to Slovakia.

It was also true in 1949, when the recent winner of the marathon in Stockholm, the Finn Martti Urpalainen, arrived as one of the favorites. The victory in the Swedish metropolis ensured him an excellent fourth place in the world tables, and the later time from Košice was, from this point of view, the sixth fastest in the end-of-year evaluation.

Other northerners, and there were quite a few of them on the course, did not do so well. They ended up missing the podium, although at the turn in Seňa they were breathing down the neck of the later winner, the Swede Söderström and the Norwegian Systad.

But even Urpalainen did not have to enjoy the victory. The driver of a passenger train from Moldavia helped him a little. Seeing from a distance the progress of the race and the lone Urpalainen in the lead, increased his speed on the track near Barca in order to pass the railway crossing before him. Thanks to this, the gates opened on time and the leading competitor did not have to nervously jump on the spot and wait to see how his rivals were approaching.

We can also mention that according to the records, a total of 91 runners lined up for the start of the marathon on Sunday, October 23, 1949, which was almost exactly the same number as that spring in Boston.

There could have been more in Košice, but on the 25th anniversary of the race, the organizers decided to set a qualifying time limit of 3:45:00 for participation. At the finish line, only three runners did not reach the finish line in this time, aside from, of course, those who did not finish the race at all.

And one more look. If we left open only the column indicating the runners' club membership in the overall results, we could mislead the less knowledgeable, if we are not talking about a football tournament. Judge for yourself: Sparta and Slavia Prague, Dinamo Bucharest, Rapid Vienna or Anderlecht Brussels.

1950 FINALLY OVERCOME

Although participation and competition in the marathon gradually increased after the war, many fans increasingly began to question whether anyone would ever surpass Zabala's 1931 course record.

The Swede Gösta Leandersson, who came to Košice in 1950 for his second victory and finally for the fastest time in history on the course to Seňa and back, finally put a smile on their faces.

He had no shortage of fans even before the start, because he arrived in Slovakia with the business card of the winner from Boston, and in the summer he narrowly missed out on a bronze medal at the European Championships. All this made him the clear favorite. After the start, he hid in the back for a while, but already at the turn, only his compatriot Jansson was keeping up with him. However, he quickly got rid of him and ran to the stadium to a big ovation for the victory and the already mentioned new course record.

If we're talking about the stadium – by the way, in 1950, 8,000 people watched the race – it was then called Sokol Dynamo ČSD, and under the three-letter abbreviation you can see the name of the railways at that time, that is, the Czechoslovak Railways. This club, which according to the customs of the time was entrusted with the technical side of organizing the marathon, was created by merging two other entities, Jednota Košice and Sparta Košice. It happened on August 5, 1949, and its showcase was the football team, playing the highest domestic competition, which at that time was called the National Championship.

Anton Holzbár from Košice was also present at the start. Like all amateur athletes of that time, he also had to support himself by his own trade, and according to his club membership it was obvious that he worked on the railway. And so, even today, the sympathetic gesture of his colleagues, who covered his working time when he needed to prepare a little more intensively for the autumn marathon, still resonates. In the end, he did not turn out badly, because among the 91 classified competitors, he took the 53rd place overall with a time of 3:11:09.6.

After the war, the question of the development of public transport for the city's residents also became an inevitable topic in Košice.

The first steps led to the gradual restoration of tram transport and its expansion to its pre-war form. The construction of new residential agglomerations also forced the expansion of the bus mass transport network. Therefore, beginning in 1950, suburban bus lines were gradually established, namely to Košická Nová Ves, Vyšné Opátske, and later also to Myslava and Nižný Klátov.

A rather strange marathon took place in Košice in 1951.

The road to Seňa required general repair, so the organizers had to look for an alternative solution. They decided on a course towards Prešov, with the turning point being set in the village of Lemešany. There was concern among the organizers about this whole change; therefore, in an effort not to lose their reputation, they decided to hold the race without international competition. And this despite the fact that applications with foreign stamps were gradually arriving in the mailbox.

In the end, 75 runners started and 65 of them reached the finish line. Without international participation, there were, of course, considerably fewer than the year before, and the times achieved were also significantly slower. In addition to the lack of competition, the profile of the track, on which it was necessary to overcome the unpleasant climb to Zelený dvor nad Košice twice, was also a sign of this condition. Jindřich Novák from Sparta Prague apparently underestimated these pitfalls. Even at the turn in Lemešany, they measured an excellent time of 1:15:45 for that period, but in the end he did not finish the race due to complete exhaustion.

Jaroslav Štrupp, the eventual winner, behaved more sensibly. He obviously saved his strength in the first part of the race, and this skillful tactic eventually brought him an unexpected first place.

And Štrupp did not spare his efforts in the following years either. However, we are already talking about his returns and loyalty to Košice. Thanks to precisely collected data, we can easily find out that he last appeared here, a long time after his first, in 1974. At the age of 56, his performance of 2:51:12 was also remarkable. The latter was only 10 minutes worse than the victory itself in 1951. It's just a shame that he didn't have time to add at least one more, that is, his 25th participation. He could have also become a member of the later founded Diamond Club KPM. Today, he would also appear in it as the only winner of this prestigious marathon.

When looking at the results list from 1951, it is striking that only 17 runners represented clubs from Slovakia. The vast majority of athletes started mainly in Prague or Ostrava colors. And at the time, even club names were paid for. Among them we can also find Stalin's Litvinov factories, Gottwald's factories in Brno or the National Security Corps in Prague. Of the six runners from Košice, as many as four wrote Dynamo ČSD Košice in this box. The best of them, then 41-year-old Zoltán Kafka, finished in 17th place in 3:04:20.

Its first event was an exhibition with a regional focus and the title "East Slovak painters of the 19th century". In 1961, its name was changed to Východoslovská galéria, and subsequently in 1965-1966, construction modifications were made taking into account the specific needs of such an institution. # 1952 FROM PREŠOV TO KOŠICE

In the world of sports, 1952 belonged mainly to Emil Zátopek and his three gold medals from the Olympics in Helsinki, with the last one hung around his neck just after the marathon.

Insiders know that it was not his main discipline, that he ran it only twice during his career, always at the Olympics. This is why ideas about his starting in Košice were never very realistic. All the more, he traveled here more often as an honored guest of this race.

In 1952, the marathon was scheduled for October 5 and clashed with the marathon in the Finnish city of Abo. The Swede Leandersson, the holder of the Košice track record, in the end headed there. Maybe he shouldn't have done so, because in the meantime another northerner, Finn Erkki Puolakka, deprived him of the title of holder of the fastest time. At the same time, Puolakka became the first runner in history to run a time better than 2:30 in Košice. Puolakka maintained excellent form throughout 1952. He made three starts that year, with two wins and a solid eighth place at the already mentioned Olympics in Helsinki.

A fundamental organizational issue in 1952 was again the change of the course. It led for the first time, but also for the last time, from Prešov to Košice. The reasons were prosaic. The major repair of the road to Seňa, along which the marathon had been run since 1926, was still not completed. And so, just like the year before, Zelený dvor became a nightmare for runners, with unpleasant climbs several kilometers before the finish line. The only thing that changed was that this time it only had to be conquered once.

At that time, the topic of the marathon was already of interest to the wider professional public, including sports doctors and researchers. In 1952, Dr. Zdeňek Hornof also published his conclusions. In his article, just published in the marathon bulletin, he drew attention to the importance of speed training of runners and looked at statistical tables for the optimal age for achieving peak performance. Even he could not resist this consideration on the topic of Zátopek's triumphs in Helsinki and presented a recalculation of his pace on individual sections of the course. This is how the readers learned that after the start, Zátopek moved at a speed of 5.19 meters per second, while at the very end, already at the end of his strength, he slowed down and ran exactly 4.54 meters in the same time unit.

A significant event was the later, more precisely in 1991, renaming of the school to the Technical University in Košice.*

ENDLESS REPAIR

The repair of the road to Seňa seemed to have no end. As a result, the two previous years the course was laid out in the direction of Prešov, but the one we are writing about now should have been run on the original course used for years.

In the end, it was so; they ran to Seňa, but since there was still uncertainty during the year in terms of the completion of the works, a difficult decision was made. The race was also held this time without foreign participation. And the formal features of organizing the marathon were also changing. After significant changes in the management structure of central physical education, the Regional Committee for Physical Education and Sports in Košice was entrusted with the preparation, while the practical steps were still ensured by a team of people assembled around the person of Vojtech Bukovský.

The absence of foreign runners was perhaps the most significant factor in the average times of the marathon winners in 1953. However, it was not the only reason. According to contemporary sources, excessively warm weather is also to blame. This also contributed to the fact that up to a third of the runners did not finish the race. In the end, Walter Bednář coped best with all the obstacles. Well, he didn't have it easy either and he would certainly have done much better under different conditions. This is also shown by his later starts, when he was able to run more than 20 minutes faster on the same course. And an even more striking difference can be seen in Jozef Klarus. In 1953, the referees at the finish line had to wait for him for more than four and a quarter hours, while three years later, in much better conditions, but apparently better prepared, he appeared at the finish line after only 2 hours and 57 minutes.

It is also evident from the preserved documents that the starting field was supplemented and changed until the last moment. So we can see how starting number 44 was originally assigned to Jiří Novosad from PDA Prešov, moved to František Jílek from Spartak Praha Sokolovo, who was additionally registered. With the low number of starters at that time, such changes could be guarded figuratively with a piece of paper and a pencil in hand.

1954 ► HE IMPROVED HIS TASTE

The marathon celebrated 30 years since its founding, so preparations were carefully made on all fronts.

Runners and residents of the city were pleased with the finally completely renovated road to Seňa, whose general repair caused everyone a lot of trouble in previous years. Nothing was to change even in the dominant position of the Northerners. Many of them came to Košice after starting at the August European Championships in Bern. Among them is the already well-known Finn Erkki Puolakka. He missed the bronze medal in Switzerland by one minute and nineteen seconds. By that much, he fell short of the Soviet Ivan Filin, who was later included among the winners in Košice. So Puolakka came to Slovakia to fix his appetite, so to speak, and he succeeded perfectly. He claimed his second victory in Košice, this time decorated with a new course record. The performance of second-place Swede, Gustaf Jansson, was interesting. He, like Puolakka, also competed in Bern and his time in Košice was almost identical. More precisely, only eight-tenths of a second faster than in the championship of the old continent.

In addition to the winners' podiums, the Northerners also dominated other positions at the top of the overall ranking. There were six of them among the fastest ten. Well, not unlike the later dominance of Africans. Only two Czechoslovaks were able to wedge themselves between them, the fourth-place Šourek and the eighth-place Pechánek. The Austrian Gruber and the well-known Hungarian Kiss finished in 9th place. At the age of 45, he even ran his current personal best at his fourteenth start in Košice.

While the spectators at the stadium on Solovjevova Street at the time saw the finish of the winners, their program was filled with other sports competitions. Among them, the Slovakian Grand Prix in the shot put or school Olympic relay races with the participation of teams from all Slovak regions.

1955 ▶ THREE AND TWENTY

Preparations for the marathon began this year already at the end of March, when individual work committees were formed and the baton over implementing the competition itself was taken over by the TJ club on behalf of the relevant physical education authorities Tatran Košice.

In an effort to ensure the best possible competition, the strictest participation limit was then announced, which was set at 3 hours and 20 minutes.

It was negotiated diligently. Especially with foreign countries, while for a while the start of the Argentinean Reinaldo Gorno, who was adorned with victories in the Japanese Kamakura and the Dutch Enschede, also looked promising. Finally, those plans failed and the competitor, led by the well-known trainer Stirling, who coached Zabala in Košice in 1931, flew home from Europe. The French expedition also apologized. According to the opinion of their athletics federation, the runners did not achieve the performances in the championship race that would entitle them to start in Košice. Attention was focused mainly on the runners from England, the GDR, Sweden and Finland, while their transport to Košice was also interestingly addressed. The foreign runners first met in Prague and from there they were transported to eastern Slovakia by air, all together in a specially prepared flight.

The race itself brought a relatively quick start. At the tenth kilometer, at an intermediate time of 33:32 min was a gradually formed front group consisting of Nilsson, Dobronyi and Kirkup, which was joined by the local Šourek. With the increasing kilometers, the Northerners began to take more and more, and they especially deserved the fact that the spectators and judges could watch one of the closest races in history. Only seven seconds separated the first three runners at the finish line, and all of them, even the fourth-place Šourek, achieved a time better than the current track record.

The great joy of the achievements and the overall progress of the marathon was later tempered by sad news. Lieutenant Colonel Antonín Zikmund, one of the co-founders of the marathon, died in Prague. Although he had to leave Košice before the Second World War for well-known reasons, he always liked to return to the east of Slovakia after the war ended. And in Prague itself, where he later lived, he carried out tireless coordination and administrative work every year to keep his beloved marathon moving forward.

HE READ THE NEWSPAPER AND CAME

Before the start in 1956, in addition to a number of tasks, one truly unexpected request waited for the organizers.

Danish runner Johanes Lauridsen, a carpentry worker and at the same time the champion of his country, arrived in Košice unannounced. This was really unexpected, because in this period the starting field was assembled exclusively on the basis of confirmed invitations. Lauridsen came at his own expense, inspired in his own words by a newspaper article. His request was finally granted and he then reached the finish line in 26th place in 2:35:41.

The program before Sunday's start was also rich and varied. In addition to the registration of runners and medical examinations under the leadership of Dr. Zapatycký, serving in those years also for extensive medical research, several social events awaited the guests of the marathon. In 1956, one of them included the performance of Mozart's opera Don Giovanni, staged at the Košice theater.

On Sunday, October 7, everyone finally got to see the race itself. The adjective extremely fast fits them best. That's because as many as eight runners crossed the finish line before the time of Nyberg's course record, which was only a year old. And at the same time, it was also a kind of closing of the much-mentioned period of Scandinavian dominance that had lasted since 1946. The Swede Nilsson managed it perfectly, facing the superiority of three Finns, among whom he especially commanded the respect of Antti Viskari, who came to Košice as a fresh winner from Boston. The Swede finally decided his narrow victory with a powerful finish in a stadium densely packed with spectators, which also meant for him a flattering 13th place in the end-of-year world rankings.

If we were to search in the results for runners representing domestic, that is, Košice clubs, we would not find much. The exception was Ondrej Ivan, running for Lokomotiva Košice, in 66th place. From his other records, it is clear that he moved from Košice and last appeared at this marathon in 1968. Even then, however, he was loyal to the railway colors. He ran in the jersey of Lokomotiva Mariánské Lázně.

1957 HE DID NOT ACCEPT ANOTHER LOSS

In the period we are talking about, the timetables for marathon runs were already quite dense.

Just a week before Košice, a marathon was run in Athens, where the Yugoslav Franjo Mihalič won in 2:26:27. In Košice, they only dared to do more. Therefore, they also issued an invitation in the name of Sergej Popov. On the first day of September, he took the top spot on the world charts when he won the marathon in Moscow with a time of 2:19:50. And he didn't come alone. His compatriot Ivan Filin, whom Popov beat in Moscow by almost two minutes, also arrived in Slovakia with him. The favorite was clear, but Filin already indicated several times in the first part of the race that he had no intention of losing again.

While the runners struggled with the pitfalls of the course, the spectators at the stadium were drawn into the action by the football match between Jednota Košice and Červená hviezda Bratislava, and during the break, the drawing of lottery numbers for the increasingly popular Športka.

While the fight for league points was still fierce on the grass, the spectators and referees saw another of Filin's repeated appearances on the asphalt road. Well, neither Popov nor other opponents could react to that one. Between the two Russians, the British Ernest Kirkup, who was also crowned that year with a victory at the national championship in Watford, was able to wedge himself into the standings. The best of the Czechoslovak runners, Jiří Michálek, took ninth place, but the records of that year do not mention runners representing the Košice clubs at all.

The 1957 season finally ended without further revolutionary changes. Popov maintained his position as the fastest marathoner in the world and, as it turned out later, the marathon in Košice never left his mind.

EXCITING FINISH

In 1958, František Višnický was born in Košice. No one knew then that he, too, would later receive the applause of the marathon fans.

The running star of that period was another domestic competitor, the then 28-year-old Czech-Slovak representative Pavol Kantorek. At that time, he already had two previous starts in Košice, participation in the Olympics in Melbourne and fourth place in Fukuoka, Japan. It's hard to say how he planned his starts that fall, but the truth is that only 2 weeks before the KPM he won the marathon in Leipzig and in December he set out on another journey, at the end of which he was waiting for a start in far away Japan. However, he was clearly well prepared at that time, because out of the entire field of runners, on October 12, 1958, in Košice, only the German Lothar Beckert, the fifth man in the ranking of the European summer championships from Stockholm, was able to resist him until the final meters. To this day, their exciting finish taking place right on the track of the Lokomotiva stadium, during which both struggled with cramps and it seemed more than once that the other would win, is still remembered. In the end, it was Kantorek who narrowly defeated his opponent, claiming the first of his three victories and becoming the first Czechoslovak winner after a 24-year-long drought. Regarding the last of these facts, let us add that we do not count the marathons that took place, as we write about it in the previous chapters, without foreign participation.

For the sixteenth time and for the last time, at the age of 49, József Kiss from Hungary also appeared at the start in Košice that year. The winner from 1939 and 1942 left a large part of his rivals behind and reached the finish line in a respectable time of 2:56:14, just before Tibor Biskup, who was debuting at the time, a native of Košice who in the following years was among the most successful representatives of the host city.

1959 WORLD-BEATER POPOV

In the year when Košice commemorated 35 years since the founding of the marathon there really was strong competition at the start.

The greatest ace was undoubtedly the Russian Sergej Popov. He got to know the local course back in 1957, and in the meantime he managed to win the title of European champion in Stockholm and at the end of 1958 to defend the post of world number one.

When the competitors set out in sunny weather on the course on Sunday, October 11, 1959, it was already clear from the first judges' notes that they would run really fast, sometimes even on the border of the world record. At the turn, Popov also appeared in the lead, and he gradually shed his opponents with several surges to finally beat them by almost 6 minutes. The resulting time of 2:17:45.2 brought him a rarely seen hat-trick in addition to the victory. At the end of the year, he was the world's fastest marathon runner for the third time. And in this context, one more thing is particularly interesting: the fact that even the second best performance in the world charts was born in the territory of Czechoslovakia at the time. It belonged to Pavlo Kantorek, who won in Ostrava on September 13, 1959, with a time of 2:19:06.

It was obvious that, after such results, Popov had to be sharpening his teeth quite rightly for the Olympic medal from Rome a year later. There, however, Abebe Bikila was already dominating, and Popov in the end finished "only" in 5th place. But more about all that in our next chapters.

If we go back for a moment to 1959 and the backstage of the Košice Marathon, we discover several interesting names among its guests. Among them was Alejandro Stirling, the coach of Olympic champion Zabala. Thus, after 28 years, Stirling returned to the places that had brought a lot of fame to his ward and to himself. And he summarized his memories of this period in a very sincere, emotionally charged letter addressed to the Košice organizers. This also indicates how deep and years-tested relationships were and are being formed between the people surrounding the oldest marathon in Europe.

The cultural infrastructure of the city gradually expanded, which also contributed to the decision of June 17, 1959, talking about the establishment of a puppet theater.

From the very beginning of its activity, this institution was referred to as a stable body with a firm position on the Czechoslovak puppetry scene. The following years only confirmed this. In addition to the founding members, other young creators also started to work in it, then also known from the TV evening shows created on the grounds of the theater. It had its premises on Rooseveltova Street, in the headquarters of the Municipal House of Enlightenment. Since 2000, the theater has been operating in a building on the corner of Alžbetina and Vrátna streets.

FROM PLASTER TO BRONZE

In 1960, the Olympic Games gave the organizers in Košice quite a few worries. After all, only 29 days passed between the marathon in Rome, adorned with the victory of the barefoot Bikila, and the starting gun in Košice.

Therefore, it was not possible to count on several top runners would completing both of these closely following races. This is why the expectations after Popov's great victory in 1959 were much more modest.

Finally, someone from the eternal city did arrive in Košice. He was the 21st-place finisher of the race in Rome, the Swede Arnold Vaide. He certainly had no regrets, because with the Košice silver around his neck, he could smile a little more contentedly than a month earlier in the Olympic stadium. Only Briton Samuel Hardicker was above his strength. It is worth adding that the form did not leave Hardicker even after a few months, as he was able to assert himself with the second place in Chiswick.

The marathon in Košice in 1960 also showed a kind of crisis in the domestic field, because despite the Olympics, and perhaps somewhat weaker international competition, the top ten still remained impregnable for the Czechoslovak competitors. Vojtěch Hec from Dynamo Prague missed out by just a few tens of seconds, finishing in 11th place.

They all made up for the somewhat average sporting results in different ways. On the eve of the start, On October 8, 1960, the statue of the marathon runner created in the studio of the academic sculptor Arpád Račko was ceremonially unveiled. The bronze monument inspired by the story of the mythical Pheidippides immediately became one of the most admired symbols of the marathon in Košice. There are countless stories or histories connected with the creation of this work. Deadline problems, the creation of a plaster model that was only later replaced by a bronze original, dramatic moments of unveiling. The curious reader will learn more about all of this in other publications. For example, also about young athletes who were models in the author's studio at the time. Young gymnast Eugen Pastor was among them. At that time, he was still far from thinking about his own marathon registration; he now belongs to the members of the prestigious KPM Diamond Club. In the years 1985–2017, he was able to conquer his track 29 times.

THEY WERE DYING OF CURIOSITY

The year 1961 definitely ranks among the most memorable in the rich history of the marathon in Košice.

And that is certainly thanks mainly to the start of the Olympic champion Abebe Bikila. The athlete, considered by many experts to be the best marathon runner of all time, started serious training only at the age of 24. Despite this, he can be proud of twelve victories, among which two are especially impressive, both won at the Olympic Games.

When he won his first Olympic gold in Rome, running barefoot at the time, the world immediately began chanting his name much more intensively. Often also with the desire to see him at the start of the next race. He did not go away, and already in 1961, audiences saw him in Athens, Osaka and finally in Košice, a city that was literally dying of curiosity. He won everywhere he went. In the east of Slovakia, even in its best time of the season. The competition of runners from four continents definitely led him to it, for which, according to coach Niskanen, he faithfully prepared. The all-expected attack on the track record was possible until the 25th km, after which it was spoiled by the excessively warm weather and the knowledge that none of the rivals were breathing down his neck. Some 30,000 enthusiastic spectators awaited him at the stadium, and tens of thousands more created impenetrable corridors along the very streets of the city.

Strict amateur rules did not allow Bikila to be paid a financial reward, so it is said that he was at least happy with the marathon shoes that František "Buben" Kapcár, one of the unforgettable deans of the Košice organizing team, bought him. And there was something else Bikila could be happy about besides the victory. From the warm reception and the lasting memory that remained after him in the city in the form of a bronze bust. It was gradually created on the basis of sketches made in Arpád Račko's studio during Bikila's short visit after the winning marathon.

The fame of this athlete in Košice never faded. In fact, it grew even more when, three years later, he achieved his second Olympic triumph in Tokyo. However, later this officer of the Imperial Guard did not have much luck. He died as a result of a car accident in 1973.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY

If we were talking about the effects of the construction of the East Slovakian Ironworks on the further development of the city, then the example of changes in urban public transport is probably the most visible.

And that's also because on April 1, 1961, the construction of a high-speed tramway to this metallurgical plant began. And other related activities of the Transport Company of the City of Košice were also related to this. Such were the reconstructions of the already existing connecting lines or the creation of intra-company bus transport.

THEY CHANGED ROLES

The European Athletics Championships in Belgrade ended only three weeks before the start of the marathon in Košice, and that meant that it was somewhat more difficult to compile a high-quality starting list even in 1962.

In the end, the homegrown Kantorek and the American Leonard Edelen became its biggest decoration.

While Kantorek was already a well-known face to the domestic audience, Edelen, who was seven years younger, raised questions. He had started a marathon itself relatively late, only at the beginning of 1961, having previously only competed in shorter road races in the USA. He even moved to England for a while, where he trained and made a living as a teacher. He improved his business card three weeks before the trip to Slovakia by winning the marathon in Cardiff, and it seemed that the relatively short distance between the two races did not bother him.

While everything was being prepared, the fans were pleased with the news that they will see the marathon on television for the first time. This was a bold attempt with many improvisations, but it allowed everyone to learn a lot and bring thousands of other spectators a living testimony of the battles on the marathon course. And the musical theme of the marathon was also a novelty. We know it and listen to it on festive occasions to this day. Those in the know know that it was composed in 1962 by composer, conductor and musical dramaturg Štefan Ladžinský, who influenced events on our music scene for decades to come.

According to the records, the course of the race, which, along with Kantorek, was mainly set by foreign runners, was affected by a strong wind. The latter especially exhausted Edelen, who spent most of his time at the front. This could also be the reason why he could not resist Kantorek's finish in the final meters. Kantorek thus scored his second victory in Košice.

At the end of the year, both found themselves in the world's top ten, but they won this position not in Košice, but in Fukuoka, Japan. It was there that the two met again after the October fight in Slovakia. And they ran really well, even though they switched roles, with Edelen beating his rival by six tenths of a second.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

The date February 26, 1962, was the beginning of the construction of the Nové mesto housing estate and its neighborhoods, which were named Lunik I - Lunik VIII. However, to this day, no one calls this housing estate anything other than Terrace, which is, of course, related to its location on a hill above the city itself

In the same year, an indoor swimming pool providing the public and athletes with an indoor 25 m pool was handed over for use in the city park. The operation of the swimming pool ended due to a cracked pool body 30 years later. After a lengthy search for another use, a fine art gallery named Kunsthalle was opened on July 3, 2013, in the original building.

1963 HE CONFIRMED HIS QUALITY

Leonard Edelen apparently couldn't forget his close defeat the previous year, so he came back one year later.

Everyone saw him as a clear favorite, even more so if the injured Kantorek was missing, and Edelen also succeeded in a June start in Chiswick, where he won with a time of 2:14:28. Sergej Popov, Basil Heatley and Václav Chudomel, all competitors with excellent performances from previous seasons, were to make his path to the Košice championship difficult. The starting shot sent the runners onto the course at one in the afternoon, and the first intermediate times were once again marked by an unpleasant headwind. Acceleration could thus only occur after a turn. And it came, such that the excellently disposed Edelen gradually detached himself from all rivals and reached the finish line in a new course record, improving it by more than two and a half minutes. A rare phenomenon was noted by the referees a little while later with the second-place Sergej Popov. He achieved exactly the same time as during his victory in Košice in 1959.

The year-end world tables then looked really flattering again. Two of the three best performances belonged to Edelen. Between his times from Chiswick and Košice, only the Briton Kilby was wedged in thanks to his performance in the marathon in Port Talbot.

When flipping through the results list from 1963, one can mention several names of runners who were connected to the marathon in Košice for a long time in other ways than just competing on the course. Such was Jiří Čadil, an officer of the Košice military garrison, who at the age of 29 completed his marathon premiere in 3 hours and eight minutes. He last appeared here as a competitor in 1970, but even then he did not lose interest in the marathon. He grabbed a referee's whistle, one with the KPM logo, and he was faithful to it for many decades.

The year 1963 also brought changes in the organizational team itself. At its head, Ján Margita had alternated many times with Vojtech Bukovský. Unfortunately, it was the last marathon for him. He died in that same year, on November 30, on his way to Plejsy, where he was supposed to give a lecture to the participants of the ski referee course. His heart, which had been beating for decades for the glory of the marathon, finally betrayed him.

In those years, the ceremonial start of the teams was an integral part of the opening of the race itself. Behind the Denmark sign in 1963 marched Tögersen and Carlsen.

The Briton Hesley and the Ethiopians Wolde and Wami set the pace at this moment. A bag with four knots protected the head of the then almost invincible Edelen.

Several periods in the history of the city were characterized by larger improvements.

One of the most striking is associated with the year 1963, when the Schalkház Hotel was demolished. It had been put into operation in 1873 and in a short time it became one of the most luxurious hotels in Hungary. At the same time, it naturally became the center of Košice's cultural and social life. Its successor, the Hotel Slovan, has been in operation at the same location since December 1971. The entire building was then modernized and expanded again in 2009 and put into operation under the name Doubletree by Hilton.

1964 NIGHT MARATHON

In 1964, the Olympics in Tokyo had a hand in the truly exceptional time of the marathon.

The Games that year were held in autumn, more precisely in October, so the Košice organizers decided to run their race on August 8 in an attempt to avoid a collision. Concerns about excessively warm weather led to the fact that the competitors, and there were 101 of them from 12 countries, went to the track in the early evening at half past six. This later contributed to really unusual views of the almost nighttime race in the stylized torch lighting of the streets and the stadium. And not only the date was unusual, but also the day. It was run on Saturday, apparently with the intention that the evening program would not interfere with the last day of the week before the people of Košice return to work or school.

In the race itself, the favored Kantorek was lurking behind the leading group in the first part of the race, but he apparently distributed his forces well. In another close race, he resisted the onslaught of all opponents and claimed his third triumph in Košice.

From the sources of the period, it can also be read that just before the start, Edelen's participation was also in the game. He ultimately decided to concentrate only on Tokyo, where he took 6th place. It is obvious that he expected perhaps more.

And thanks to the postponed Košice deadline, Kantorek also had time for rest and further focused preparation for the Olympics. He took 25th place there in the same time as he ran in Košice.

If you take a closer look at the entire course of the marathon in Košice, you can see a slow but still noticeable increase in the number of Slovak runners. There were 22 of them, although several of them were entered at the bottom of the score sheets, but the time when we could literally count them on the fingers of one hand was already in the past. The more seasoned Kania and Biskup won a place in the top twenty, and next to them, even then, was only 23-year-old Adam Košťál.

The early evening date in August was recorded as the most unusual in its century-long history. We know the reasons. Plater (3), Chudomel (6), Kantorek (7) and Töggersen (8) hit the course.

Night was falling on the city. A scene that will probably never happen again.

A few weeks after the evening performance in Košice, the best of the best presented themselves in Tokyo.. Abebe Bikila took home a second Olympic gold here.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

We have already mentioned the establishment of the Technical University operating in the city since 1952. Operation and teaching were made difficult by the fact that the school was scattered in several buildings at different addresses. A change was therefore inevitable. It was in 1964 that the design work was completed and the construction of the main building of VŠT on Letná Street could thus begin. Let's add that the construction work itself lasted until 1974.

And from November 7, 1964, the regular transportation of passengers on the already mentioned high-speed tramway to the VSŽ area began.

1965 A SPICY DERBY

In 1965, all sports events in Košice were somewhat overshadowed by football.

The latter in the city experienced a significant revival after the crisis period, so much so that in the 1965/66 season, two teams from Košice suddenly appeared in the top competition. In addition to VSS, the Lokomotiva VSŽ Košice team also won promotion to the elite. And that's why there was no doubt that the marathon Sunday at the stadium would be filled by the first ever derby of these two teams. And so it happened. A few minutes before the first runner crossed the finish line, the referee blew his whistle and sent the men playing in front of 25,000 spectators to the locker room after a goalless draw. However, zeros were soon replaced by ones. Belgian Aurele Vandendriessche crossed the finish line in first place with this number on his chest. But in this case, there really was no big surprise to speak of. After all, who would doubt the ambitions of an athlete decorated with victories in Boston and other major world marathons. However, he didn't have just anyone on his heels. He was accompanied to the podium by two prominent Brits. In the silver second place was the then only 24-year-old Bill Adcocks, could be proud of the title of champion of his country, won in the summer, and the bronze position was Brian Kilby, who finished right behind him on August 21, 1965, at the same championship in Port Talbot, Wales. In 1965, the podiums in Košice were occupied by runners of the highest quality. And these words were then underlined by Adcocks' later championship in Fukuoka or on the classic course from Marathon to Athens in 1969.

And one more big name in world athletics moved over the Košice athletics track that year. During the football break, another famous Belgian appeared in the frame race. He was none other than Gaston Roelants, Olympic champion from Tokyo and world record holder in the 3000m steeplechase. He could thus wait a few dozen minutes after his performance and warmly jump into the arms of his compatriot in front of the packed stands.

HE BURNED UP IN KOŠICE, SHINED IN MEXICO

In 1966, Košice saw the largest field of runners ever, numbering up to 131 pairs of legs.

However, the form of the start list published in the program bulletin sounds a little strange.

For starting numbers 1 and 2, only the countries are listed; the names of the runners are missing here. It can be concluded that at the time of the press deadline, there were promises from the given national athletic federations, but specific names had not yet been given. Today we know that the Japanese Aoki later pinned the number one on his chest and the Ethiopian Mamo Wolde the number two. While Aoki finally fought his way to the bronze position, the 24-year-old Wolde ended up deeper in the field of the defeated. However, whoever debuted him was not doing well. Two years later, he won at the Olympics in Mexico, making him one of the four runners with this title who competed in the marathon in Košice in the past century.

On Sunday, October 2, before the starting gun rang out and the white pigeons rose to the sky over the heads of the runners, the spectators at the stadium watched the first few disciplines of the athletics program and could also look forward to the obligatory football match. The club playing under the now-forgotten name Lokomotiva VSŽ Košice played against an opponent from Budapest.

A large 29-member leading group moved on the course up to the end of the 10th kilometer, but just before the turn, everything was different. Only the Briton Alder, the German Fink and the Hungarian Tóth competed side by side. In the following moments, Tóth quickly built up to a 300-meter lead over his rivals, and that ultimately was decisive. However, his victory cannot be described as particularly surprising. Just a few weeks later, he finished sixth in a well-attended Fukuoka marathon and continued to do well in the seasons that followed. This is evidenced by his later personal record of 2:14:59 and the second victory in Košice, which he won in 1971.

Before that happened, however, Gyula Tóth enjoyed the well-deserved ovation of a packed stadium and congratulations from a special guest on October 2, 1966, from the hands of four-time Olympic champion Emil Zátopek.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

There are dates we don't like to remember. On the night of December 3 to 4, 1966, Urban's Tower burned down, as did the bell of St. Urban. It was made in 1557 by František Illenfeld, a bell-maker from Olomouc, and the people of Košice dedicated it to the patron saint of winemakers, as it was thanks to the wine trade that the city achieved significant economic development in previous centuries.

However, the next date can be presented much more happily. On January 8, 1966, the Košice entertainment show "Maratón" began to be broadcast. After that, every week for many years, it reminded radio listeners throughout the republic of the indisputable connection of Košice with this royal sports discipline.

1967 UNKNOWN FARČIČ

Only two people on this planet have won both of the two oldest marathons in the world, i.e., in Boston and in Košice.

The Swede Gösta Leandersonn and Belgian Aurele Vandendriessche. The second-named returned to the east of Slovakia after his championship in 1965, again in a Jagava dress, already crowned with silver from the European Championships in 1966. But it was of no use to him. Once again, the paper assumptions did not apply and the Belgian did not even finish the marathon due to health problems.

The path to the championship was thus opened for one of the most surprising winners in the history of the KPM. Yugoslavian Nedjalko Farčić lived in Sweden for several years; he also raced there, and he came to Košice at the age of 26 without a significant entry on his business card. However, he ran excellently, and after Vandendriessche dropped out, his most serious opponent was the Ethiopian Gebiru Merawi, the eighth place finisher from the Rome Olympics in the 5000 m run. However, Farčić was able to deal with him and relegate him to second place. The two then met a year later at the Olympics in Mexico. The roles reversed there, as Merawi finished in an excellent 6th place and Farčić dropped out.

Even this time, the organizers did not forget about the rich accompanying program. For the spectators, they ensured an attractive international athletic competition between the Czechoslovak national team and the Hungarian national team. And even though it was already after the main track season, the athletes turned out for several excellent performances. Especially the home team, who finally won the competition with a total score of 112:93.

The results list of the marathon records a total of 120 runners in 1967, and up to three-quarters of them managed it in under 3 hours. In these entries we find several names of people who gradually became integral figures of the Czechoslovak marathon event: Anton Javorka, Ivo Domanský, Jiří Čadil and Vincent Juhás.

1968 TANKS ABOVE THE TRACK

The year 1968 became very special for the country and the marathon in many ways.

In Czechoslovakia, during the period of the so-called Prague Spring, society was going through a revival process, and ways out of the difficult political situation were being sought. However, all hopes were dashed on August 21 by the invasion of Warsaw Pact troops and the subsequent Soviet occupation. Changes, restrictions, a time of uncertainty and later ideological normalization came. The marathon, planned after many years again for October 28, the day of the 50th anniversary of the founding of Czechoslovakia, was put into isolation. It was decided that only local runners would take part in this confusing and uncertain situation. Once again, but this time for different reasons, it was run without international competition. It would be hard to find anything positive in this change. One can only guess that those for whom the marathon in Košice was almost inaccessible due to the strict qualification limits got to the start. One such runner was the then 22-year-old Juraj Fotul Dnes, who half-jokingly says that he completed his marathon premiere back then only thanks to the tanks in the city. However, there is something else remarkable about his story. With his rich marathon career, decorated with almost two hundred entries, he said goodbye in the same place where he started. And at a number that inspires respect. It happened exactly 50 years after the memorable moments of 1968.

And the day of the start itself became unique. It was, unusually, a Monday, because it was the national holiday of the founding of the republic.

If we return to the course of the race itself, the clear favorite was the then 36-year-old Václav Chudomel, starting for Bohemians Prague. He had finished in 18th place at the Olympics in Tokyo, taken part in the European Championships in 1962 and 1966, and with a career best of 2:15:26 won in 1964 on the route from Windsor to Chiswick. But according to the results themselves, he really didn't have much to do with his opponents on the course. He managed to win by almost two and a half minutes, well ahead of the second-place finisher. This, already unconventional year, finally recorded another rarity. This was the two third places, as the judges, who did not have a target camera at that time, could not determine the order any differently.

3. – 4. Anton JAVORKA	TCH/SVK	2:30:14,6

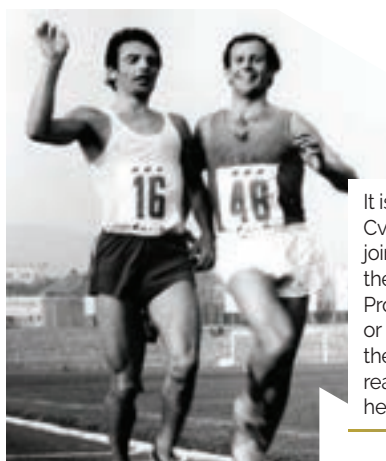

The marathon was preceded by a running relay between Prague and Košice. To those taking part this seemed like too few, so they added another 42 marathon kilometers.

Runners at the 30th kilometer mark. The banner is already facing the photographers. Maybe because of the advertising and brand of the Hornád department store?

The starting list in 1968 was compiled in a truly unconventional way. Runners were assigned numbers according to the alphabet. Even here, however, there were changes and exceptions. Karol Brunik from Lokomotiva Košice was originally supposed to run with number 13. In the end, however, we see that number on the chest of the victorious Chudomel.

It is not known what led Cviček and Javorka to this joint race. One from Lovosice, the other from Piešťany. Probably an older friendship or emotions experienced on the course. However, they really messed up the judges' heads.

There had to be room for four. But that wasn't really a problem.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

The period after the Second World War, the events of February and judicial murders that followed, entered a certain period of relaxation and faith in a better future in the 1960s of the last century.

All this was thwarted on August 21, 1968, when Warsaw Pact troops occupied the country. The people of Košice also tried to stop the military convoy. In the vicinity of Liberators' Square there was shooting and subsequently the death of eight people. Heavy military equipment, which remained in the city until September 4, significantly damaged local communications, but even greater damage was done to society as such. Trials against the enemies of socialism began again, thousands of people went into exile, many lost their jobs or the chance to use their skills in a dignified way. We then had to wait another two decades to reverse the consequences of this invasion and disgraceful normalization.

The marathon somehow returned to its old ways in 1969.

Foreign competitors could once again appear at the start and this was reflected in the performances themselves and the final order. The previous year's winner, Václav Chudomel, the best domestic runner, only made it to the top of the second ten in the results list. In the end, there were 98 competitors, headed by Demisse Wolde. If the name sounds familiar, let us add that he was the younger brother of Mamo Wolde, the Olympic winner from Mexico, who, as we wrote about earlier, presented himself in Košice without much success in 1966.

The victories of African runners were not as frequent at that time as they would be many years later, but the whole running world definitely had to notice them. Especially if we consider that in that period they already managed to win three Olympic marathons in a row, thinking of those successively held in Rome, Tokyo and Mexico City.

On the day of the Košice marathon, Sunday, October 5, there was, as several times before, really bad weather, but this could not deter a hundred well-prepared runners who met the demanding qualification criteria.

Hungarian Gyula Tóth, the winner from 1966, started to set the pace. However, he clearly overestimated his strength, slowed significantly in the second half of the race and finally finished in tenth place. In addition to Wolde, his compatriot Medhin was also at the front, and their cooperation and frequent changes of pace finally tore the leading group apart perfectly. The artful tactics suited Wolde the most, who only confirmed that he was rightly ranked among the wider circle of favorites.

Did the Bulgarian Simenonov belong among them? It's hard to judge, but he ran onto the track with number one on his chest. This is usually awarded to the defending champion or the competitor with the best performance among the runners present. In this case, neither one nor the other applied. Would the alphabetical order of the participating countries decide? Not known.

It can be seen from the pictures that the weather was, and always is, a key factor in the attendance of events. The rain in 1969 emptied the concrete stands of the Lokomotiva stadium.

Another of the surges of African runners. Several of them came after the turn. Here McGregor catches this one.

In the end, Ethiopia only had Wolde on the podium. The remaining two spots were taken by Europeans.

Dr. Ján Zapatický took care of the runners' health in those years and also managed to devote himself to interesting scientific experiments and measurements.

What elegance compared to today. The Ethiopians arrived in Košice in 1969 in decent suits, but that didn't stop them from sitting on the ground at the picnic.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY

As part of the XIV. Košice Music Spring festival, on April 16, 1969, the first ever concert of the newly founded Košice State Philharmonic took place under the leadership of the then chief conductor Bystrik Režucha.

Successful years followed, and with the growing numbers of listeners, the symphony orchestra quickly gained the recognition of experts and the public and thus became one of the leading representatives of Slovak performing arts at home and abroad.

In the second half of the 1960s, marathon runners around the world started running to rewrite the record books more vigorously.

The absolute best performance in history moved forward even in 1970, when the legendary Ron Hill improved it to 2:09:28 with his victory at the Commonwealth Games that summer. It should be added in the same breath that it was not completely clear at that moment and Košice also found itself as part of the whole plot in a certain way.

That was when the Australian Derek Clayton arrived at KPM in 1970 as a clear favorite.

He was convinced, and at that time even the athletic authorities proved him right, that he was the holder of the valid world record with his performance of 2:08:33. Later, however, the track in Antwerp, on which Clayton won this time in 1969, was measured and found to be shorter than the prescribed 42,195 meters. However, this does not detract from Clayton's qualities even today, especially if we look at his countless other great performances. Among them we can find the time of 2:09:36 achieved in Fukuoka back in 1967. And it was undoubtedly the world record at that time.

The Australian champion got off the plane at the beginning of October 1970 in Košice only to learn that the organizers had prepared some competition for him. The Japanese Kenji Kimihara, the silver medalist from the last Olympics, managed to finish, as well as Nedjalko Farčić, the Yugoslavian winner of the KPM in 1967.

And it should be added that the diplomatic representation was also representative. The event was honored with a visit by the head of European athletics at the time, Adriaan Paulen, and the general secretary of the IAAF, Frederic Holder. It is also true that Paulen really liked Košice and did not forget it even when he reached the highest position. As the chairman of the IAAF, he again traveled to Košice in 1980.

The race itself had a somewhat surprising course, when none of the mentioned favorites was enough for the Russian Mikhail Gorelov. He set his personal best in Košice and claimed a victory, which nothing in his further career surpassed. Clayton had to settle for fifth place, but regardless, he is undoubtedly one of the most important runners ever to appear in Košice.

In addition to the runners, period photographs also provide us with a view of the fleet of accompanying vehicles at the time.

In the city center, after the start, the Belgian Peiren (4), the Yugoslav Farčić (15), the Japanese Kimihara (14) and the gesticulating Lemma from Ethiopia (8) alternated at the head of the race. The biggest of the favorites, the mustachioed Australian Clayton, was still in control of the situation at this moment.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY

In the center of Hlavná Street in Košice are the most important medieval church buildings of the city. Three of them, St. Elizabeth's Cathedral, the Chapel of St. Michael and the bell tower - Urban's tower, were declared a national cultural monument in 1970 due to their high artistic and historical value. St. Elizabeth's Cathedral, the cathedral church of the Košice Roman Catholic Archdiocese, with an interior area of 1,200 m<sup>2</sup> and a capacity of over 5,000 people, is also the largest church in Slovakia.

For the October date in 1971, six weeks after the European Championships in Helsinki, the organizers tried to bring the best possible competition to Košice.

Even then, it was evident that the regular August continental and later world championships, embellished every four years with Olympic competitions, would gradually become a significant challenge in the effort to get the best to the start in Košice.

All the more so because at that time the number of new, economically strong city marathons was gradually increasing. And so in Košice in 1971 runners without much experience naturally appeared. And, as it turned out later, with an interesting future.

Among them was the barely 20-year-old Hans-Joachim Truppel. At his premiere at the KPM in 1971, he only got just below the 2:30 mark, but after some time he was already among the leading runners of the old continent. His later personal maximum of 2:11:56 also speaks of this.

However, even in 1971, the older runners set the tone in Košice, initially in a large 23-member group, which gradually began to crumble.

At the 15th km, even the already mentioned Truppel tried to lead, but nobody else could handle the best. This was the Hungarian champion Gyula Tóth, who finally claimed his second victory in Košice after 1966. In the showcase of this participant of the Olympics in Mexico City and Munich, the KPM trophies were certainly in a worthy place.

Of the domestic runners, who were only allowed to start with a proven time of under 2:50, Václav Mládek, starting for the club Secheza Lovosice, reached the highest place, 12th overall. If you start looking for people from Košice, they probably didn't do very well in 1971. There weren't many of them in the starting list, so maybe only Vincent Juhás saved the honor, finishing in 72nd place.

A typical identifying sign here are the blocks, which are gradually broken into half-blocks in the ground plan, and in the center of which the so-called demotorized zone with greenery and works of art. The settlement grew on the area between the Terrace housing estate and the public cemetery in the locality, or rather on the hill, which was also known as Šibeničná hora. This name is derived from the city gallows located in ancient times at this very place.

FARRINGTON'S RETURN

The beginning of the 1970s in Košice was quite a bit Australian.

The favored Derek Clayton failed to win here in 1970, but his compatriot John Farrington, who at that time occupied the leading ranks of the world rankings, did not let the victory be taken from him two years later. As one of the few favorites on paper, he was able to fully fulfill the pre-start forecasts in Košice.

A total of 18 countries were represented. The reason for this, from today's point of view, relatively low number was still valid strict qualification criteria, which even then did not allow anyone to start in Košice. It was, of course, also reflected in the form of the result sheet itself, in which the last runners lined up with times just over 3 hours. And it was also true that you would have had difficulty finding runners over 40 years old at the start, although there was one exception. This is connected with the name of the then 56-year-old Jaroslav Štrupp. Even at this age, the runner from Veselí nad Moravou managed the course in 2 hours and 53 minutes. Those who have read the previous chapters more carefully will not be surprised. In his case, we are talking about the winner of the KPM from 1951, who maintained an admirable performance even at an advanced age. Well, in addition to his running qualities, he also convinced the people of Košice of his loyalty. This is also illustrated by his record 24 successful starts recorded at the KPM results from 1945-1974.

Let's add that the victorious John Farrington also demonstrated a certain form of loyalty. Although the Australian failed to defend his title a year later, he returned to Košice one more time. In 2012, he came as the protagonist of the project In the Footsteps of Marathon Legends to commemorate the fortieth anniversary of his triumph in Košice. And to experience again, according to his own words, the unrepeatable atmosphere that had grown so close to his heart already in 1972.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

When evaluating individual construction activities in the city, one cannot avoid the creation of a truly unique neighborhood for its time.

In 1972, a system of terraced houses was built on the terrain edge between the old and new town, with a difference in height of 25 m and a slope of 30 degrees, as the first building of its kind in Slovakia. The houses are grouped into two rows of seventeen objects, creating four levels with interestingly placed terraces in front of the individual apartments. Thanks to such a solution, the complex was harmoniously integrated into the environment in which it was designed.

In the previous chapter, we mentioned that the winner from the previous year returned to Košice in 1973 with the clear goal of defending his title.

Farington's self-confidence was also strengthened by his position at the head of the current world ranking. That belonged to him after winning in Sydney with a time of 2:11:12.

He did not owe anything to the reputation of a clear favorite after the start; he set a fast pace and began to rewrite one record split time after another. However, the treachery of this demanding discipline was confirmed again, when he had to withdraw at the 35th kilometer due to acute stomach problems.

The path to the first place suddenly opened for Vladimir Mojsejev, who had been running steadily behind him until then.

And here, too, we can repeat the words about a certain crisis on the domestic scene. In the confrontation with a diverse and strong international cast, the result was that not one of the county's representatives placed in the top twenty among competitors from 11 different countries. In the end, Luděk Kocián in the club colors of Slávia Prague was the best, finishing in 21st place.

But there were also promises. For example, František Kažimír from Ruskovo, not far from Košice, also started his marathon career inconspicuously that year. He was 22 years old, and for his performance of 3:14:48, he was second to last. The very next year, however, he showed an incredible jump in performance. The judges measured his time at the finish line at 2:32:18, and the balance of his other Košice starts was later noteworthy. He finished in a time better than 2:40 eight times.

And perhaps one more moment caught his eye. It was the premier run of marathon hopefuls. Talented children from Košice schools presented themselves on a 5.5-kilometer track leading from the stadium through the city center. A step that can be compared to today's Minimarathon, always popular with thousands of children of all ages.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

Trains have been going to Košice since July 1860, while the station buildings themselves have been changed, built, demolished or modernized several times. The last historic building was demolished in the 1970s, and the new one, modern for that time and architecturally refined, was put into operation on December 29, 1973. However, time did not stand still here either and this very object was gradually rebuilt and revitalized again from 2011. It was completed in 2017 and 2018 into the form it is known today.

The marathon was celebrating 50 years since its founding, so conscientious preparations began to unfold even more ahead of time than usual.

In some respects, however, they were in vain, because the weather refused to issue a favorable opinion. Many who remember call it the worst ever in the entire hundred-year history of the marathon. Rain, cold and strong wind. However, the biggest favorite and the real star of the world marathon did not seem to take all of this into account. Ron Hill, the European champion, the man who won in Boston and who already boasted a time under 2:10 at that time. He took to the course with such vigor that even the world record at the time was shaken to its foundations at the turn in Seňa after an interval of 63 minutes.

But his efforts were put to the test by the already mentioned elements. Running into a headwind, he quickly lost his strength, which was better distributed by his pursuers working together in a more resistant group. Hill finished in 28th place at the end, but everyone had to appreciate that he finished the race at all and did not give up the previously lost fight prematurely. However, he still waved to the people of Košice from the highest step. Although that was only later, in 2014. As one of the guests of honor of the marathon, he decorated the members of the junior relay team bearing his name.

However, in 1974, even without Hill, the medal slots were indeed filled with dignity. Judge for yourself. The victorious Keith Angus later presented himself at the Olympics in Montreal, and his personal record for 10,000 meters – 28:45 – inspires respect to this day. We already wrote about the German Truppel, the second-place finisher, and of the three, the bronze-winning Cierpinski certainly achieved the most although only later. To this day, he can be proud of two gold medals from the Olympics in Montreal and Moscow.

A special feature of the half-century celebrations was also the cancellation of the performance limit, so this year hundreds of truly recreational runners got on the course. Among them for the first time was Peter Polák, later record holder in the number of marathon starts in Košice. He rarely missed it, and if nothing happens, he will definitely be at the start even 50 years after his premiere.

We have also mentioned some stages of possible creation in other parts of this publication. The school became a reality only in 1952, and the gradual creation of individual faculties fulfilled the requirement of increasing its universality and humanization. However, a fundamental change was the completion of the main building of the Technical University in 1974, which completed the construction of a complex of university buildings serving the education of technical intelligence.

The Košice organizers could plant another flag on their marathon globe.

For the first time, a group from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea arrived. The country is still somewhat shrouded in mystery; at that time it was still a part of the relatively robust Eastern Bloc, in which after its disintegration it became somewhat orphaned. The black-haired quartet of runners arrived by express from Moscow in uniform jackets and somehow behaved in uniform even on the track. They waited for a long time inconspicuously in the background, and except for the instruction of the coach, everyone stepped out of the shadow of their opponents to quite convincingly occupy the complete places on the podium. However, it was not clear for a long time who should have stood the highest. Because the race of the first two compatriots in a friendly embrace, captured well even in contemporary photographs, must still bewilder the referees of the time. They finally decided that it would be Chang-Sob Choi. No one protested, so the anthem could be played. Together for all three. It was to be heard again in the coming years. A total of three more times. And always with the participation of then 20-year-old Chang-Sob Choi. True, now without the crown around his neck. And he didn't only travel to Slovakia. In the following years, he managed to make it to the Olympics in Montreal, where he finished in a very respectable 12th place, and he did not miss the start at the games in Moscow and also did very well in Fukuoka, Japan.

If we look at the best in 1975 and beyond, we come across another exotic country, Honduras, in 14th place. We will probably never know under what circumstances Carlo Morales appeared at the start, but from the wider context it can be deduced that he lived for a long time in Europe, perhaps in the former German Democratic Republic. When he ran the 5000m in 18:40 at the Olympics in Mexico, you probably wouldn't have bet too much on his future career. Despite this, he was able to gradually improve and attack times under 2:18 in the marathon.

On December 4, 1975, the first planetarium in Slovakia was opened to the public in Košice. It acquired premises in the Technical Museum and was equipped with the most modern technology at the time, but above all a projection device, which demonstrates a view of the night sky from both the northern and southern hemispheres of the earth.

With the help of the device, it is possible to represent objects visible to the naked eye, i.e., the Sun, the Moon, five planets of the solar system, but also some visible nebulae, galaxies or the Milky Way. Since 1975, the projection hall of the planetarium has made it possible to embark on a truly adventurous journey through space.

Thus far, in the entire history of the marathon, athletes from the 29 countries have stood on the podium, but one of the undisputed running superpowers, Japan, got its first champion only in 1976.

It must be said that even today, runners from the Land of the Rising Sun are not completely commonplace at marathons in Europe. The main reason, apart from the geographical distance, is mainly the number of excellent opportunities to start in domestic conditions. If you take a closer look at the running calendar, you'll have to agree. In 1976, however, the journey to Košice was measured by three Japanese competitors. In the end, the one with the shortest last name became the fastest. However, his name was not a surprise. Takeshi So only confirmed the expectations, when the role of the favorite belonged to him mainly thanks to the previous performance of 2:12:52 from the already mentioned marathon in Fukuoka. Well, it wasn't that easy for him in the end. He had to fight for the first place with the Brit Barrington Watson and Vilho Paajanen from Finland.

Takeshi So, a technical clerk from a textile factory in the city of Miyazaki and a member of one of the many Japanese corporate teams, managed to place himself in the top ranks for many more years after his victory in Košice, including in Tokyo in 1983. Here, in addition to the second place, he certainly enjoyed a great personal record of 2:08:55.

After a kind of running amnesty in 1974, when it was possible to stand at the start in Košice even without a strict limit, the following years brought a return to the selection system. This is also evidenced by the propositions of the competition in 1976, where it is written that the organizers will accept applications from foreign runners with a performance under 2:35, and the domestic ones are required to meet the so-called first performance class, determined at the time by a time of 2:43. It should be added, however, that even from these really strict rules, some exceptions occasionally emerged.

In the now traditional look at domestic runners, we can mention that their reputation was defended especially by Miroslav Krsek from Sparta Prague, who finished in 11th place.

As for the people of Košice, there were still not that many of them. Scrolling through the results, we come across Vojtech Peterčák, the already mentioned Peter Polák, and Viktor Fotuľ, in whom we later met one of the pioneers of triathlon in Slovakia.

In the summer of 1976, more precisely on June 29, the foundation stone of the Heroes of Dargov Housing Estate was laid. However, its better-known popularized name is Furča, derived from the Hungarian word kóvár, i.e., strange or odd, perhaps pointing to the complex geological conditions of this location.

The first of the later 30,000 residents could move into the new apartments at the end of 1977, but the construction of the seven integrated residential districts still took some time.

This year we cannot forget the completion of the football stadium in the Všešportov area, which was built since the end of the 1960s. It was opened with a league match at the end of February, but the match between the representatives of Czechoslovakia and the Soviet Union became a difficult test. Both teams parted amicably after a 2:2 draw on March 10 in front of 40,000 spectators.

The marathon program had its customary form during this period, but other activities gradually increased.

In 1977, boaters participated for the eighth time. They competed in Hornád and Ružín already on Saturday and then also on Sunday morning, so that later they could watch the runners' battle against each other.

Over the years, when less strict conditions allowed it, it often happened that several of the sports enthusiasts managed to complete the running marathon after the rowing marathon. Symbiosis and examples of sports universality that have lasted until today.

If we take a closer look at 1977, we see that the race was once again dominated by Asians. In this context, it is interesting to note that although we could count the number of top runners from the most populous continent on the fingers of two hands over the course of the entire century, a total of six titles were won in Košice. Two went to Japan and four to North Korea. One of those was also in 1977. The most serious opponent for the Koreans, who at that time came to Košice regularly, was the Olympic champion from Montreal, Waldemar Cierpinski. However, he fell 41 seconds short of victory and had to accept third place again. Let's repeat that, despite his brilliant career, Cierpinski did not convert a single one of his five starts in Košice into a victory.

In 1977, Chun-Son Go defeated him in Košice. They were not strangers. Cierpinski defeated this slender runner at the Olympics in Montreal, but also 4 years later in Moscow. In Košice, however, everything was different, and in addition to the victory, Go shone here with an excellent performance, by which he came within ten seconds of the course record held by the American Edelen. He was to completely rewrite it a year later.

The quality of the race is illustrated by the fact that up to 17 runners reached the finish line in under 2:20. Miroslav Krsek, still faithful to the Sparta Prague jersey, was the best of the home team with a 12th place finish.

The road seemed to be narrow in places for the best in 1977. No wonder. As many as 58 runners reached the finish line in under 2:30.

And it continued sharply even far beyond the city. The group is led by American John Bramley (5) and Richi Umberg (15) from Switzerland. He maintained a warm relationship with the marathon in Košice throughout the following decades.

Waldemar Cierpinski stepped on the heels of the Koreans for a long time. In the end, he had to settle for third place.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY

If in the previous chapters we praised the Philharmonic and the building in which it is located, we must also state that the concert hall had and still has excellent acoustics. Therefore, it is not surprising that in 1977 the most modern concert organ in Czechoslovakia was installed here.

In the same year, on April 23, the long and eventful life of the so-called Middle Mill ended. This was done by demolition, which was preceded by a large-scale fire. The mill served for more than a hundred years, and its activity was terminated by the abolition of the millrace that drove it. It stood in the area of the city park opposite the Europa Hotel.

Marathon Sunday in 1978 was once again preceded by harsh and rainy weather.

Although the flood of water from cloudy skies stopped the night before the start, the track was flooded to such an extent that the first meters in the stadium had to be laid out directly on the football pitch.

Let's also remind you that it was also one of the last years when it was necessary to meet the relatively strict qualification limit to participate in Košice. The result sheet demonstrates this. We find only 85 entries in it, while the last one had a value of 2:55:16. However, the winner was at the finish line much earlier, of course. The previously mentioned Korean Chun-Son Go came to defend his title accompanied by three other countrymen. His plan worked out perfectly and they were able to enjoy the first two places. After 15 long years, he also significantly rewrote the course record of the American Edelen, when he set its new mark at 2:13:34.

If we would like to follow the further running fates of this two-time winner from Košice, we will certainly come across the French city of Évry, where Go started in March 1979. The fact that he won here, too, was not such a surprise, but the time was exactly the same as in Košice, something we can certainly consider a rarity. However, from the Korean side, it was far from all in this city in the province of Esson. After another victory, this time in a respectable time of 2:10:52, he returned here in 1980.

Well, as the reader can see, the North Koreans were particularly successful in Košice during that period. Later, their compatriots also joined and won, but even this era was finally to come to an end. Runners from this increasingly isolated country last appeared on the podium in 1989.

Prolonged rain forced the organizers to move the start from the athletics track to the grass of the football pitch. Starter Vladimir Harant appeared again in his typical white coat.

The track is as straight as a straight line. Many liked its monotony, many condemned it.

In this phase of the race, British runners Watson (3) and Kearns (27) tried to set the pace. The first of them fared better, but he only took home the unpopular potato medal (fourth place) from Košice.

Not even two hours were enough for the stadium track to dry out. Perhaps only the author of this photo was happy about it.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

October 30, 1978, became one of the most tragic days in the modern history of Košice.

During the tram ride on line no. 6 heading from Terasa to Peace Marathon Square, the brakes failed and the set derailed while descending to the amphitheater. Nine people lost their lives, ten passengers suffered serious injuries and eighty others escaped with minor injuries. Later, a small monument commemorating this tragic event and its victims was erected at the accident site.

The fact that the second half of the 1970s in Košice was good for young runners was confirmed by the 22-year-old Kortelainen in 1979.

At a similar age, the Koreans and the Japanese runner So also claimed victory here. Well, this was no accident, more a virtue out of necessity. As the quality of the best was moving towards the limit of two hours and ten minutes, economic opportunities began more and more to play a role; thus, Košice ensuring a high-quality competition became more demanding every year.

That is why, after an extremely successful period of great performances by Popov, Bikila, Edelen, Wolde and Farrington, the organizers had to focus more on the start of young talented runners standing on the threshold of their careers. Such was the Finn Jouni Kortelainen at the time.

However, this was not his Košice debut. He had already taken the bronze position here a year earlier, so maybe this experience and knowledge of the course gave him the necessary courage. Since the time of Bikila, he was the first runner who was already leading at the turn in Seňa and whose back all the rivals had to watch until the finish line. At the time, he certainly had no idea that this brave solo and well-deserved championship would ultimately be one of the greatest successes of his entire career. Later, he started without much success at the Olympics in Moscow; in 1981 he finished 12th in Boston, and in 1986 he also claimed the home championship title.

Thus, after a long break, Kortelainen expanded the list of runners from Finland on the pylon under the statue of the marathon runner. Until then, Finns had recorded four victories during the post-war years of the marathon in Košice.

In 1979, the second place finish of Stanislav Tománek, who appeared in the Rudé Hvězda Prague jersey in all seven starts at the KPM, was a revival and encouragement. And from today's point of view, the time of the last place competitor at the finish line is also worth noting. It was 2:44:02 and it was good for 65th place by Václav Kameník.

Soldiers have also been involved in the preparations of the marathon since its beginnings. In 1979, one of them took care of water for leader Kortelainen in this way.

Don't let the two wreaths mislead you. Local Tománek won it for the title of champion of Czechoslovakia.

But the others didn't stay thirsty either. In the foreground with number 68 was the then thirty-year-old Miroslav Krsek from Sparta Prague. Bečka, who was running behind him, ultimately couldn't keep up his pace and reached the finish line with a gap of seven minutes.

After full commitment, complete exhaustion often comes.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY <sup>1</sup>

In February, the Retirement Home on Garbiarska Street was put into operation. This boarding house with a capacity of 162 residents was the first facility of its kind in Slovakia at the time.

In July, the restriction of motor vehicle parking in the city center came into force, and this was only the beginning of further fundamental changes gradually introduced in the historic heart of Košice.

In October, the city crossed the threshold of 200,000 inhabitants, November brought the beginning of the construction of the tram line to Krásná via Sídliisko nad Jazerom, and in December, work related to the Košice Zoo project started in the Kavečany area.

If we ask ourselves what interesting things happened at the KPM in 1980, we will find more than enough answers.

Even today, we can probably agree that the most important event was the premier women's start. The world got to know the pioneers of women's marathon running already in the second half of the 1960s, so it was time to get things moving in Košice as well.

It happened on October 5, 1980, right in front of IAAF President Adrian Paulen and World Peace Council Chairman Rómeš Čandra. In the end, 14 courageous women reached the finish line, twice as many as in the men's first attempt in 1924. And their competition was not lacking in drama, when Šárka Balcarová was the first to cross the finish line, but only six seconds ahead of the second-place Vlasta Rulcová.

The men's field was already much larger in 1980. The judges needed more than 1,000 lines for their records this time, after the significant relaxation of the participant limits. But in the question of the winner, the paper prerequisites were not fulfilled this time either.

Fresh two-time Olympic champion Waldemar Cierpinski was clearly at the end of his strength at the end of a successful season, because although he still dominated the first part of the race, he did not reach the finish line. In the end, the somewhat surprising winner was the Soviet Alexey Lyagushev, who defeated not only the Pole Jerzy Finster, but also his significantly better-known compatriot Leonid Moseyev.

And local Pavol Madár also had his day, starting in the East Slovakian Ironworks jersey. Even though it ended up being an unpopular 4th place, he became the champion of Czechoslovakia and with a time of 2:15:44 ran his lifetime best in Košice.

The variety and quality of the starting field is also indicated by the fact that up to 12 countries were represented in the top twenty men's races, 28 runners finished in under 2:20, and the hundredth runner at the finish line clocked a respectable 2:35:25.

Where are the spectators, on the track? A somewhat paradoxical view of the sparse stands and the filled oval below them. Participation was not limited by qualification limits, and the number of runners jumped over a thousand, including for the first time, female runners.

Who knows what unfolded before the start in the head of Katarína Penzešová from Trnava (44). She was about to run the first marathon of her life. She managed it with honor in 3:18:15.

One of runners couldn't handle the crowd at the turnaround point. Above him is the Swiss Richi Umberg, for whom it was the most successful of his five starts in Košice.

A historical moment. The roles have changed. Šárka Balcarová reaches the finish line and a young man in folk costume hangs a laurel wreath around her neck.

In the months of April, May and June 1980, buildings on the corner of Hlavná and Štúrová Streets were gradually dismantled with the help of detonation works. The building of the Dargov department store with the original, but at the time discarded, name Domino was designed to fill the vacant space.

On May 22, 1980, a cooperation agreement between Košice and Wuppertal was signed, then as the first document of this kind between cities from countries with different political constitutions.

In November, the Small Stage of the Košice State Theater was opened in the modified premises of the former Partizán cinema.

After last year's premiere, the women were preparing for their second start in Košice in 1981. And the first truly big name appeared in the list of registered users.

It belonged to the German Christa Vahlensieck, one of the pioneers of the women's marathon, and for a time the holder of the world record. She decorated her first start in Košice with a really convincing victory.

And finally, it was a German day. In the men's competition, Hans-Joachim Truppel claimed his seventh start at the KPM and finally came in first place. All this again in front of the head of world athletics Adrian Paulen and with the support of a large number of spectators filling the city streets and the tribunes of the Lokomotiv Košice football stadium located at the entrance to the Čermel'ské Valley.

Traditionally, there was also a complete domestic top team, for whom the fight for the title of the champion of Czechoslovakia was the unequivocal highlight of the season. And Pavol Madár from Košice did the best in it after a year, repeating his fourth place in the absolute ranking.

Thanks to the relatively generous four-hour time limit, the marathon itself was now definitively opened for hobby runners. In 1981, 792 men and 17 women reached the final gong. Among them were three women from Košice. The fastest among them was Alžbeta Tiszová, then under the maiden name of Bernáthová. Then she literally fell in love with the marathon event. This is evidenced by dozens of her successful registrations, including 34 from Košice itself so far. Together with her husband Tibor Tisz, whose name shines with the respectable Košice time of 2:27:36, they created certainly the most famous married marathon couple in Slovakia.

And the form of the program bulletin has also grown considerably. That's because the number of pages of this printed magazine had to grow considerably when trying to publish the names of all those registered in it. This custom lasted for many years, until the organizers gave it up under the pressure of the already significantly growing number of names and achievements of digital technologies.

However, they are related to each other and have been developing since October 31, 1981, when a pedestrian zone was created in the center of Košice on today's Hlavná Street. In 1983, the Municipal Monument Reserve, the largest of its kind in Slovakia, was declared, and almost immediately, on January 2, 1984, cars were completely excluded from this zone. The next logical step was later also the exclusion of tram transport, which took place on July 3, 1986. All these changes were the subject of passionate discussions at the time, but today everyone only praises them.

1982 ▶ EVA KISSOVÁ'S FIRST ENTRY

The European Championship in Athens and the Asian Games, both events held relatively close to the date of the marathon in Košice, again put wrinkles on the forehead of the organizers.

Just before the start, it was possible to bet mainly on German runners in the men's competition. Defending champion Truppel was there, and the young Michael Heilmann could also second him. There was also Jörg Peter, an ambitious runner with a later personal best of 2:08:47.

However, everything turned out differently. By the decisive day, the runners from Hungary apparently woke up the best, and after an unexpected start at the 38th kilometer, they took the first two places at the finish line. The highest one will forever be associated with the name of György Sinkó.

What about the women? In the starting field, their numbers were still a little lost. A third winner was to be found among the three dozen or so participants. As with men, gold and silver traveled to the same country. British runners Gillian Burley and Julie Berleycorn deserved it.

By the time the winners were placing their bouquets in the vases, the chief referee blew his whistle to end the 1982 International Peace Marathon after exactly four hours. Within the set limit, 978 men and 27 women reached the finish line. Among them, Eva Kissová, who was still Winterová at the time, was in an inconspicuous 26th place at her debut. Then, and actually later, too, she was a starter without ambitions to attack the higher rungs of the overall ranking. However, she conquered one field with her patience and loyalty. She ultimately became the runner with the highest number of starts at the KPM. At the time of writing these lines, she already had 37 of them on her account. And no one around her thinks that more should be added.

Well, when flipping through the result sheet, the attentive reader will also be interested in the next line. It has the name of František Višnický and serial number 82. A year later, he was to move much, much higher.

In May 1982, the building was handed over to the public for use, along with the entire area, which we do not like to enter at all.

The explanation is not difficult. It is a place associated with last farewells to loved ones. The crematorium was built on the design of the architect Pavel Merjavy. He placed it north of the city, on the edge of the forest park, which creates an impressive environment for such moments. The central space is a ceremonial hall with dominant glazing and a view of the natural scenery, which enhances the dignified atmosphere of farewell ceremonies.

London, Rotterdam, Frankfurt, Vienna... This is only a partial list of the large European cities in which marathon were established at that time, gradually attracting the fastest runners to their start.

This gradually had to be reflected in the events in Košice and also affected the sporting level of the KPM itself. Although it did not decrease rapidly, the times of the winners here in this period lagged behind the world's best performances somewhat significantly.

Even so, there was always something interesting happening here. The year 1983 is no exception. The sensational victory of home František Višnický certainly resonated the most. And he was literally at home. He was born in Poľovo, today one of the districts of Košice, and thus became at that time only the second person from Košice to win the race, after Karol Hall. Let's remember, however, that while Hall succeeded in the small competition of seven first-year local runners, on October 2, 1983, behind Višnický, another 1,119 men reached the finish line, including among them really high-quality runners from Germany, Great Britain, Russia and Sweden. The later winner shook off all of them in the second half of the course, where thanks to the wind blowing at his back, he even accelerated significantly and was able to run it more than 4 minutes faster than the section before the turn. Another sports program was waiting for the spectators escorting the runners out of the stadium at the then traditional 1:00 p.m. This time in the form of an attractive league match between the home team Lokomotiva and the visiting team Dukla Praha. For the sake of completeness, let's add that the home players did not imitate Višnický and lost to the visitors from Prague 0:1.

The fourth women's race brought a third entry in the overview of course records. The Soviet runner Raisa Sadrejdinová took care of it. She was already 39 years old at that time, but she did not get to the marathon until just before the end of her career. She had spent most of it on the track, most often competing in 3,000 m runs.

Let's add that 28-year-old Mikuláš Dzurinda quietly made his marathon debut in Košice that year. Later, he added his starts in Košice wit

Well, in October of the same year, the construction of the House of Technology, including the planned congress hall, began, which was also to mark the beginning of the transformation of Liberators' Square. The building itself was handed over for use after a delay of several years, even with only the administrative part and the Centrum Hotel. Despite several attempts, the congress hall could not be completed; the building under construction was finally demolished and, of course, the intended reconstruction of the entire square was abandoned. December 17 also became a significant day for the city, when the new tram line from the VSS intersection to the Krásna III housing estate began operating.*

It seems that the marathon's organizers were unlucky on the anniversary of the marathon.

Cold, wind and rain ruined a lot of work and hopes back in 1974, and ten years later, at the sixtieth marathon, the weather turned gloomy again. So much so that the start had to be moved from the athletics track of the Lokomotiva stadium, drenched in persistent rain, to a side asphalt road. The runners were not deterred, however, and with the wind at their backs headed towards the turn in Seňa, while the famous Ron Hill of ten years ago seemed to want to be imitated by another bold runner. This time it was the local Peter Polák, a man who later became known as the most frequent participant of the marathon in Košice. In 1984, he decided to take a risk with the wind at his back. He reached the five kilometer mark with a lead, where the referees hidden under an umbrella marked his time in the appropriate box at exactly 16 minutes. However, a group of pursuers soon caught up with him and the race began again. In its end, the Korean Dong-meng Lee pulled away to the finish. And how did Peter Polák's solo turn out? After an "overheated" start, he was able to book 19th place and a finishing time of 2:26:41.

In the case of the women, everyone could write down the first two-time winner in their reports. The German Christa Vahlensieck found herself at the finish line in a time almost identical to that of 1981. However, the story of one of her rivals seems quite bizarre. Myong-Suk Kim from North Korea was allowed by the organizers to start at the age of 15 years and 8 months. It is difficult to say how the exception from the prescribed age of 18 was permitted. However, as quickly as she appeared on the scene, she also said goodbye to marathons. But not forever. Just after her 40th birthday, she suddenly returned to the action at a race in Pyongyang. At that time, she reached the finish line of the marathon in a time well below 3 hours.

If we stay with this topic, we can mention that even in 1980 we come across a runner who started under special circumstances. This was Milan Ivan. He was then only 15 years and 11 months old. As he later admitted, he changed his date of birth in the application and apparently no one noticed it or didn't want to come. However, he did not do badly in the end, because he was at the finish line in 3 hours and 6 minutes. And that it was not a matter of chance, as far as the performance is concerned, he confirmed later in 1990. At that time, he really came of age and finished in an excellent 8th place in Košice, with a performance of 2:29:05.

The city continued to grow and May 18, 1984, marked the beginning of the construction of the new housing estate Košice-Ľahanovce. According to the original plans, construction was to be done on both sides of the main avenue, which, however, would lead to the demise of the adjacent historic village of Ľahanovce. That intention was abandoned, so today there are two distinct districts in Košice. One is the village of Ľahanovce and one is the housing estate of Ľahanovce.

There have not been many start to finish winners in Košice.

It was really rare for us to see everyone else watching the back of one of the runners all the time. Zabala and Bikila were imitated in 1985 by Valentin Starikov. He came, he saw, he conquered. And for a long time it even looked like he could handle the record set by the Korean Go in 1978. At the 25th kilometer, the referees wrote down the split time with a minus sign and the number 1:16 min.

But Starikov, who arrived in Košice with a February calling card and sixth place from the marathon in Tokyo, finally gave up. In the end, he had to be glad that his opponents did not have time to spoil his brave solo.

In the women's competition, the then 28-year-old Lutsiya Belyayeva was better than Christy Vahlensieck. The two had met two years earlier at the first athletics championship in Helsinki. Here, too, the Russian runner was more successful in their competition, although she was wearing the jersey of the then Soviet Union. She finished tenth, seven places ahead of her rival.

If we stay with the women's competition, we will note the premiere of the then only 19-year-old Katarína Jedináková, at that time competing in the colors of Slávia VŠT Košice under the maiden name of Baloghová. Although she caught up to the tail, she was not deterred at all. She bit into the marathon sandwich with even more gusto and the results came. If you want to know more, move forward even now to 1999.

Štefan Hrušovský, the athletic referee and trainer, who with the starting pistol in his hand was a truly integral figure of the marathon in Košice, watched all the events very carefully. And we could admire his loyalty to athletics for a really long time. His commands and shots were heard for the final time only in 2019. That is why, at the age of 89, he received the unofficial title of the oldest marathon starter in the world.

Vladimír Harant exchanged a few words with Cierpinski at the finish line. He also headed the organizing committee of the marathon in Košice for a short time.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

The beginning of 1985 was marked by the completion of the buildings of the former party bodies on SNP Trieda. As is known, these buildings later became the seat of the Municipality of Košice.

September then not only marked the beginning of the school year, but also brought the opening of the first part of the Zoological Garden in Košice, located outside the city in the suburban part of Kavečany. As a result, the city acquired another prestigious attribute, as this ZOO became the largest in area in Central Europe. The sections dedicated to Eurasian fauna were the first to be made available in this unique natural area.

Preparation for any of the years of the marathon always required mastery of a number of tasks and looking for answers to various questions.

In the final days, determining the names of possible winners was also included. In the 1980s, it was certainly easier to bet on the women's races. On the one hand, there were significantly fewer women at the start, and on the other hand, Christa Vahlensieck often came from Wuppertal to Košice in that period. And at that time it was always a signal that the circle of favorites could narrow significantly. That was also the case in 1986, when she decided to close the season, made up of marathon starts in Houston, Los Angeles and Boston, in Košice. Christa, as many here familiarly called her, confirmed her position as the favorite and claimed quite clearly her third victory at MMM.

For men, the situation at that time was much more difficult to estimate. However, those who once again bet on domestic runners got it right in 1986. For his second championship, František Višnický beat a field of thousands of opponents. While his first triumph in 1983 was certainly surprising, now journalists and fans could trust him a little more. In the meantime, he improved his personal best to 2:14:14 in Maassluis, the Netherlands, and the experience gained in the national colors at the World Cup in Hiroshima was also added. However, the period between the two Košice championships also had a bitter taste for him. He longed for the Olympics, but his dream was thwarted by a boycott. The countries of the then Soviet bloc did not send their athletes to Los Angeles in 1984.

Apart from the best, the marathon gradually attracted more and more passionate recreational athletes to its start. Many repeatedly, some only once. Many also in order to prove to themselves or those around them that they have what it takes. And so Milan Kňazko also put on marathon shoes in 1986 to the great interest of the public. At the time, an extremely popular film and television actor, later one of those on the podium at the Velvet Revolution of 1989. And maybe he could have been satisfied. The stopwatch next to his name showed 3:35:13.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

In the space between the Košice National Theater and St. Elizabeth's Cathedral, the construction of the singing fountain was completed and the day of its commissioning was May 1, 1986. The spraying of water and the colored lighting of the fountain were regulated based on the musical frequencies of the given composition. The fountain gradually went through several renovations, the first twenty years later, and the next in 2024, when it was restored to its current form.

In January 1986, the Furča 4 tower reservoir was put into operation, which supplies water not only to this part of the city, but also to part of the neighboring village of Košická Nová Ves. Due to its location and characteristic appearance, at a height of 23 m, it is probably the most visible symbol of the Heroes of Dargov housing estate.

The program of the marathon, given mainly by the rules of its competitive part, cannot be changed too much.

However, what makes up its wider framework, the various accompanying programs, has brought interesting acts to the events in Košice from time to time. In 1987, two are worth mentioning. The first was the opening of the Sport in Philately exhibition; the second was also an exhibition, albeit with a different content. The Košice presentation of the works of the artist Edita Varinská, who lived near Wuppertal at the time. This was already a sign of building closer relations between the two cities.

And the unmissable Christa Vahlensieck also contributed to these relationships. Although women ran on the marathon course for the eighth time on Sunday, October 4, there were still only five names under the marathon runner's statue a few days after the race. The bronze letters in the shape of the German champion's surname could be composed for the fourth time by the sculptor Arpád Račko. Maybe even the little ones.

In the men's race, fellow German Jörg Peter, 6 years younger than Vahlensieck, dominated. He came to Košice with a personal best of 2:09:14 and fulfilled the role of the favorite perfectly, leaving behind the Russian Porotov and Karel David, then a rising local star. The native of Dresden also took third place in Fukuoka, Japan, in the same year and improved his personal best a year later in Tokyo to 2:08:47.

If in several previous chapters we have written about the relatively poor representation of purely Košice runners, the tide began to turn in these years. We can definitely talk about a kind of Košice running school, formed in this city undoubtedly under the influence of the marathon itself. In addition to the already mentioned Višnický and Maďár, this phenomenon can be observed in 1987, when up to 38 runners with Košice club affiliation reached the finish line in under 3 hours. On the first pages of the results list, we could read names like Peter Polák, Tibor Tisza, Milan Furin, Ján Strömpl, Pavol Obraz, Rastislav Kuchta, Peter Buc, Vladimír Polák, Michal Krivda, Ján Kálavský and many others.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

On June 29, 1987, the drama troupe of the State Theater said goodbye to the historical building after 88 years of operation with a performance of a play by Ján Solovič. A large-scale reconstruction and modernization of the building and its entire area began, which lasted until 1994, while the theater moved to the House of Culture ROH VSŽ for that time.

Do you know what Rokodromo is? This is the name given to the training cliff used in the Čermel Valley since 1987. At that time, it was the first and only such training cliff in Czechoslovakia and is still characterized today with a height of 9.2, a width of 8.2 and a length of 24.2 meters. The idea was implemented by climbers from Košice, inspired by a similar structure in Quito, Ecuador.

Before we get to the subject of the chapter title, we must mention that several of the then well-known marathon participants in Košice met much earlier in 1988.

In the spring, they were part of a unique relay race from Wuppertal in West Germany to Košice, more than 1,700 km away, in order to confirm the gradual change in the social climate and the removal of barriers between nations and countries. The legendary Emil Zátopek also supported the idea with his personal participation in the role of ambassador, and along with the enthusiastic runner and organizer of this project, university professor Andreas Ziegler, the several times mentioned Christa Vahlensieck and several Košice residents did not hesitate to wear the relay jersey.

And it was Vahlensieck who was unbeatable again even in the October race itself. And in her own way, she also contributed to another interesting picture. Because while after the war there was repeated talk about a Scandinavian era, the 1980s can be safely called the German era. In three years in this period both victories, i.e., for women's and men's championships, went to the later reunified Germany. Each time thanks to Vahlensieck, who gradually seems to have brought her compatriots to such a "double". In 1981 Joachim Truppel, six years later Jörg Peter and finally in 1988, with his fifth individual triumph, also Michael Heilmann. He entered the marathon event unusually early for today's time. He was not even 21 when he made his debut on the track in Dresden, only to gradually appear in the result lists of marathons in Tokyo, Fukuoka, Berlin, Los Angeles, Rome and Milan. And quite often he waved at the audience from the highest step of the podium.

When this happened in Košice on October 2, 1988, perhaps no one had any idea that it was the last time the runners presented themselves on the course leading to Seňa and back.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

In August 1988, the people of Košice could enjoy an unusual event, which at the time had no parallel in the whole of Czechoslovakia.

We are talking about the opening of an 800-meter-long water ski lift in the Nad jazerom housing estate. In addition to the exceptional construction, there were only 72 such lifts in the world at the time. The operation was also connected with the possibility of increasing the self-cleaning capacity and quality of the water, which, according to hygienists, lacked oxygen. And this step was certainly an impetus for the further development of water skiing in Košice, which was gradually reflected in the excellent results of the athletes of this sport at the most important world events.

In 1989, the marathon was held only a few weeks before the November events that went down in history as the Velvet Revolution, bringing irreversible changes in the social organization of Czechoslovakia at the time.

And a kind of small revolution took place in the marathon itself. After 63 long years, the course no longer led to the turnaround point in Seňa. A working group led by Emil Rusk, an international referee and later director of the sports and technical department of the KPM, measured the course on the first ever urban circuit. The latter was tested and approved by a group of domestic runners in advance, still in hot summer weather. There were not many objections, so everything could be prepared for the premiere on Sunday, October 1. And there was one more important change. The traditional starting time of just after noon has become a thing of the past. The starting shot now sounded at nine in the morning.

We also welcomed a female winner in Košice in 1981 for the tenth time, again in well under three hours. This time it was Alena Peterková from Ostrava, Czech Republic, accompanied on the course by Peter Polák, later the record holder in the number of Košice starts. He eventually ran a few meters ahead of her, and the well-known TV commentator Karol Polák, not knowing that it had been agreed upon between the runners, admonished his namesake both jokingly and seriously for his lack of gallantry. But more important that day was Peterková's course record of 2:31:28, which stood for 20 long years. This winner from Košice achieved several more remarkable results in her later career, including 4th place in Boston, but unfortunately she was also accompanied by a two-year ban due to offenses against doping rules.

On the highest stage in Košice, she was accompanied by another domestic competitor, Karel David, starting at that time in the jersey of Dukla Banská Bystrica. In his time, he was one of the best marathon runners in Europe. He started at the Olympics in Seoul and Barcelona, won the marathons in Vienna, Bonn and Palermo, and in 1991 he improved his personal best to 2:11:12 in Tokyo. Well, and finally, let's remind you what prizes were being competed for at that time. They looked really attractive in Košice at that time. Peterková and David took over the keys to new Škoda cars.

The events of November 17, which began with the dispersal of the student demonstration by members of the security forces at the National Classroom in Prague and the subsequent strike by university students and actors of several theaters, quickly spread to Slovakia and, of course, to Košice.

The first meeting of students in connection with the events in Prague took place on November 21 in front of the Košice University of Technology building. The next day, classes were interrupted and a strike began here as well. After that day, thousands of people from Košice began meeting in front of the State Scientific Library building on Hlavná Street, with the demonstration being the most massive November 27, i.e., the day of the nationwide general strike.

The first marathon after the fall of the Iron Curtain brought changes that were not possible to overlook.

Although it did not impress with its sporting performances, many other interesting things happened that determined for many years the further fate of the event hidden under the letters KPM. Although in the next few years the race was faced difficult years of economic and social transformation as well as coping with a temporary decrease in the number of participants, there were also impulses in the form of possibilities for fuller international integration. They gradually anchored the brand and message of the oldest marathon in Europe in the full meaning of these words.

The whole society was transformed; the pre-November unified physical education was looking for its next form, so the creation of a new institution in the form of the Marathon Club was quite a logical outcome of this event. Among the initiators of this step we find the names of Štefan Daňo, Marián Lukáč and other people who in the following years shaped the progress of this institution and the race itself.

As expected, the preparations in 1990 were also affected by the first, sometimes even passionate, discussions about the city circuit presented the previous year, which received a revised form a year later. The start and finish took place outside the gates of the stadium, in the square that has been named after the marathon itself for many years. And the premiere start of handicapped athletes in wheelchairs became a new element. They finally began to get space, and not only in the marathon itself, to show that even people with such difficult fates can live fully and compete together with others. In the race itself, Róbert Štefko, later the most successful endurance athlete in the history of Slovak athletics, tried the marathon distance for the first time. But after these bites, he returned to competing on the track and was able to wait patiently for his greatest marathon successes. The already mentioned performance stagnation of MMM was confirmed especially by the times in men's races. After 16 long years, the winner in Košice did not get below the 2:20 mark.

In 1990, the female winner was also an interesting figure. An American athlete won for the first time, and so far the last time. At that time, Carol Latchie already had a rich career behind her, several championships and qualifying fights for the start at the Olympics in Los Angeles. In strong domestic competition, her personal best of 2:35:09 was not enough to advance to the games under five rings in 1984. And one more mention should not be missing when taking stock of 1990. Ľudevit Majoroš also stood at the starting line of the marathon for the last time. Except that at that time he was 79 years old, and the date of his first time in Košice is also fascinating. It took place on October 28, 1932.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

On January 18, 1990, the Slovak government issued an opinion on the personnel changes of the leaders of the former regime, as well as on such changes in companies and schools.

A little later, on April 20, the official name of the state was changed to the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic, and parliamentary elections were held on June 8-9. In them, the party and movement that were at the forefront of the democratization changes won with a majority.

Some legal amendments, adopted in this period on a larger scale, also affected the city of Košice itself. On October 1, a law of the National Council of the Slovak Republic was adopted regulating the status of this city in a self-governing territorial unit, the operation of which was ensured by the created municipality. At the same time, the well-known establishment of 22 city districts took place.

The marathon had definitely established itself with a city circuit, and Peace Marathon Square became the place of the start and finish for the second time, while the organizational team expanded its board.

For the first time, the author of this publication, the later long-term director of the KPM, appeared on the board and for the fourth time also at the start of the race itself. Later, he could not reconcile both activities and goals.

In the warm autumn weather, approximately 500 runners took to the course, which was almost half as many than the year before. There were several reasons. Certainly the fact that many wanted to finally travel after years of isolation and try one of the many marathons abroad. And the numbers were also influenced by the fact that the competition was still only over the full marathon distance. And so the younger or less fit still had to stay cheering on the sidewalk. Well, in a few years even this was to change significantly...

In 1991, the main prize was definitely the motivation for the best. A Volkswagen Polo was waiting for the winner. The 30-year-old Portuguese Domingos Neves, the Ugandan Ruguga, but also several Russian and British runners were grinding their teeth for it. However, the Moravian Vlastimil Bukovjan, who was then representing Banská Bystrica Dukla, beat them all. However, with his victory, or more precisely with his award, unexpected conflicts arose. The promised vehicle from the sponsor ultimately did not arrive in Košice, so the organizers, to avoid the sense of shame, had to display a hastily borrowed "duplicate" in the square and silently apologize to the winner. But the vicissitudes continued too hastily, and the handover of the car finally took place in February of the following year. After that, fortunately, it served reliably and its new owner traveled with it to Košice many more times.

Mária Starovská made her mark among the women, of which there were still only twenty at the finish eleven years after their Košice premiere. Starovská then showed her full potential just six months later, when she also won the marathon in Barcelona in a much better time of 2:34:07. Jarmila Šuniarová became the best Slovak and Košice runner thanks to her 6th place. Many remember her from those years as a selfless volunteer who spent the days before the marathon at the workplace issuing start numbers.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

The city of Košice has been associated with the topic of aviation for many decades, and this fact, together with the existence of the Aviation Academy, led to the creation of the White Albatross acrobatic group.

August 3, 1991, is considered the day of its birth, when the first group flight of L39 - Albatross machines took place over the venue of the World Parachuting Championships in Lučenec. For many years, the group then very successfully represented the city and our military aviation at many world exhibitions, and according to estimates, more than 2 million spectators could watch their art with their own eyes during that time.

Looking at the notes from 1992, we see the constant efforts of the organizers, who were still looking for the most suitable form for the city circuit.

It already had its third modification in the fourth year. The start and finish area remained at Peace Marathon Square, but new streets appeared on the map of the route, among them, for example, Tolstého and Obrancov Mieru. However, it must be said that even this route was only valid for one year. And one more change was already on the horizon in the fall. The marathon was held that year, if we ignore the unfortunate period of the Second World War, for the last time on the territory of Czechoslovakia. Less than three months later, the independent Slovak Republic was established.

The organizers were looking for competitors all over the world to be at the head of the starting field. They put the number one on the t-shirt of the defending champion, the Czechoslovak Vlastimil Bukovjan, and behind him lined up a constellation of runners from Benelux, Poland, Italy, Great Britain, Russia, Ukraine and two African countries, Kenya and Zimbabwe.

However, the women's running field still lagged behind in terms of number and quality. It was made up of domestic, Russian and Ukrainian cross-country runners, and there was no clear favorite. In the end, Dana Hajná from Moravian Kopřivnice took the top spot, and it was undoubtedly the most successful of all her eleven starts in Košice. She had made the first one as a 21-year-old in 1985.

The men's race turned out somewhat surprisingly. The most seasoned Eddy Hellebuyck from Belgium, who came to Košice with the business card of the army world champion and the winner of the Japanese marathon Lake-Biwa, had to settle for fifth place, and none of the other rivals could match the Pole Wiesław Pałczyński. Although he did not come close to his personal best from the spring marathon in Paris, he clearly dominated the running field and became the first Pole to win in Košice in the history of the race. He arrived accompanied by Henryk Paskal, who himself started at the KPM in 1980 and later became a successful athletics manager, organizer of the half marathon in Pila and a long-term enthusiastic ambassador of the Košice Marathon in Poland.

The international regional fair was connected with the effort to stimulate business in the Eastern Slovakia region, including in the form of such presentations and professional seminars. An interesting accompanying event was also an exhibition of documents and materials about the history of mass markets, exhibitions and parades in Košice and also about the development of business over the last 150 years. It was thus possible to realize that the redevelopment of these economic activities was not starting on a "green field", but that it rests on almost forgotten, but still intact foundations from past years.

1993 WIESŁAW AGAIN

Another year and another modification of the city circuit. Looking at the track map the effort to create two symmetrical circuits could already be seen, which gradually came closer to the well-known form used today.

Dieter Damm from Germany came to check it all on September 4, 1993, and after his inspection the course received the necessary certificate of the world marathon association AIMS.

New accompanying activities appeared in the marathon program, among them the autograph session of favorites, at which the then 35-year-old two-time KPM winner František Višnický appeared, albeit only as a guest. He let himself be heard in one of the interviews that, despite his health problems, he is still not giving up on the idea of returning to the running scene. But it turned out that, unfortunately, there was no real comeback in his case.

Višnický's record of two championships was imitated in 1993 by Patczyński. While the first victory of a competitor from Poland in Košice was awaited for 68 long years, the second one came immediately after. It also undoubtedly reflected the running boom that we have witnessed in our northern neighbors since the 1980s. Wiesław Patczyński grew up amid this strong generation of Polish runners, which included names like Huruk, Beblo or Gurny. Several co-favorites, including Derek Froude from New Zealand, boasting a New York personal best of 2:11:25, were to make his path to the second championship in Košice difficult. However, it was not enough for Patczyński, and the runner from the distant Pacific ultimately stood on the silver step.

We have already mentioned that in those years the marathon in Košice was going through a kind of crisis in the number of participants. The fact that, after the division of Czechoslovakia, runners from beyond the Morava River began to decline to a greater extent also contributed to this. And the rather strict four-hour time limit was mentioned more and more often as an obstacle. Finally, under the pressure of trends abroad, too, the organizers modified it a year later and gave the runners another 60 minutes to cover the course.

This time there was also a marathon barbecue. The first from the right is Emil Rusko, who for many years dealt with the tasks of the sports and technical section of the KPM.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

On the first day of January 1993, the independent Slovak Republic was established, and this meant, among other things, that Košice became the seat of the Constitutional Court. It was located in the former Csáky-Dessewffy Palace, where it operated until 2006.

Despite the financial problems with which the city's public transport also struggled, the first ŠKODA 15 Tr trolleybuses were delivered to Košice in August 1993, and on September 20, their operation was ceremonially started on the ROH VSŽ House of Culture route – Hlinkova ulica – Lingov.

This year, however, there were also extinctions. The Košice brewery ended its activity. It was founded as early as 1852 and for a long time was primarily associated with the name of Konštantín Bauernebl, who gradually took over the company and managed it for many years.

The marathon was celebrating its 70th birthday, so it wanted to shine with an interesting running program.

Ahmed Salah from Djibouti was also supposed to play his role in it. He came to Košice with a personal best of 2:07:07 from 1988, which at that time placed him in a fantastic second place in the historical world charts. If we add to that the bronze from the Seoul Olympics and two silvers from the world championships, you would have looked in vain for a bigger favorite at the start. But you would have also looked in vain for him later in the results list. This was all caused by Salah's fall at the 14th kilometer, after which he continued to run, but after a few steps, he definitively withdrew from the race. The path to the championship was thus opened up for his opponents, among whom Petr Pipa, a little surprisingly, finally won the championship. A runner born in southern Bohemia, living in Banská Bystrica with his charming wife from Michalovce, unexpectedly found himself at one of the peaks of his career.

He later added victories in the Vigarano, Italy, and in Hamburg, but also the disappointment of narrowly missing the qualification for the Olympics in Atlanta. He lost his participation in the games under the five rings, really unfortunately. He wanted to meet the limit in the spring of 1996 in Hamburg, but he was left alone. The organizers forgot to wake up the runners who were supposed to help set the pace and to transport them to the start. Thus, Pipa won the race in solo fashion, leading from start to finish, but fell a few seconds short of the needed time limit.

If we go back to Košice and to 1994, we see that in the women's competition, another local star, Ľudmila Melicherová, was an excellent accompaniment to Pipa's victory. After her two triumphs in Vienna in 1990 and 1991, she established herself on the Košice scene as well, and so finally there was a jubilee marathon in which both winners wore the Slovak tricolor on their jerseys.

A sort of prelude to the dramatic race was the festive moments in the Košice theater on the eve of the start. The guests and the music-loving public enjoyed the tones of Donizetti's opera Drink of Love with Štefan Margit in the lead role. The world-famous tenor came to his hometown, so that he too could contribute to the marathon celebrations, which was headed by his father Ján Margita the elder for many years in the past.

And the last mention belongs to the expansion of the competition program. For the first time, a half-marathon was included in the competitive part, without which we could not even imagine the running holiday in Košice today.

The Slovak double was completed by Ludmila Melicherová. At the finish line, the first thing she looked at were the unpleasant blisters.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

On September 18, 1994, a rare visitor came to the city. Together with his friends and teammates, Pelé - real name Edson Arantes do Nascimento, considered by many experts and fans to be the best football player of all time - arrived in Košice. The three-time world champion from 1958, 1962 and 1970 held a press conference in Košice and the ceremonial kick-off of the match between the internationals of Czechoslovakia and Brazil.

Just a few days later, on September 23, after seven years of reconstruction work, even theater art lovers got to see it. The historic building was re-opened in its full glory, including in the presence of the then president of the Slovak Republic, Michal Kováč.

The marathon was entering another decade of its existence, with two home-grown defenders of the title at the start.

While Pipa may not have spoiled the mood with sixth place in strong competition, Ľudmila Melicherová could have been less satisfied. Unfortunately, she did not see the finish line after experiencing health problems.

If we talk about strong competition, it was especially true for the men's competition, counting up to 23 names of runners with performance below the 2:20 hour mark in the start list. In the end, the tall, blond Belgian Marnix Goegebeur had the most strength. Running with the number four on his chest, he left behind both more experienced Poles and the entire top ten, made up of runners from 8 countries. Not much of a surprise happened in the women's race. The championship of Guzel Tazetdinová was definitely expected. The racer, who was supposed to return to Košice one year later, apparently fell in love with Italy. All her other starts, taking place almost exclusively on the Apennine peninsula, indicate this.

While the people grouped around the KPM brand reached the final and most difficult stages of preparations for this year, they decided to look behind the curtain of one of the world's great marathons. A bus full of organizers and runners set off in April for distant London, where they were only preparing for the 15th edition, but the potential of this great city was already evident in the precise preparation of the race and the great sporting performances of the best. A lot of photos and memories remained. Among them are those of Dr. Braňo Bohuš, a sports doctor, known from clinical practice and from the benches of several sports clubs, where he took care of the physical, but often especially the mental health of male and female players. His unique sense of humor also helped to shorten the journey and maintain the mood on board the marathon bus on the route Košice - London and back in 1995.

A rare look at Zlatica and Štefan Semanov. A married couple who also dedicated their lives to the marathon. Unfortunately, Štefan left us prematurely after a tragic accident in the mountains.

Runners know that a proper warm-up should not be underestimated. Marcel Nemeč also graduated with honors. Many years later he appeared in the KPM organizational team.

Several veterans met at the finish line of the half marathon in 1995. The first from the left is Jozef Česla (born 1909), next to him is the already mentioned Ľudovít Majoroš (b. 1911), who took to the marathon course in Košice for the first time in 1932.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

Sunday, July 2, 1995, also entered the history of the city. On this day, Pope John Paul II visited Košice.

Three Košice martyrs were canonized at the solemn holy mass. Part of the mass was the establishment of the archbishopric of Košice and also the promotion of Msgr. Alojz Tkáč as archbishop. Around 400,000 people listened to the sermon of John Paul II at the airport, and the response to this event was the fact that the first Slavic pope in the history of the church is commemorated in Košice by several monuments. Among them is a statue of him unveiled in the Barca district eleven years after this memorable visit.

In 1996, the organizers' thoughts must have started to shift in two directions.

The preparation of the annual marathon had to be combined with the fulfillment of tasks before the approaching half-marathon world championship in 1997. And so it was like running along two tracks at once. Inspection trips, a sea of correspondence, but also, for example, the preparation of the championship logo, which was approved by the IAAF Council during its meeting at the Atlanta Olympics.

While everything was fine-tuned in 1996, the people of Košice managed one more truly special feat. In April, three dozen runners and organizers set out on a journey overseas. The goal was the jubilee 100th year of the Boston Marathon. They didn't get lost; they congratulated themselves, many even scored excellent finish times, and after a week's interruption of their own preparations, they rushed back to the busy round of the following days.

Well, after the starting shot sounded on Sunday, October 6, 1996, everyone really started to rush to the finish line. First the best. Among them, on paper, the strongest Ethiopian Negere, decorated with victories in Fukuoka and Venice. However, he did not even finish after being injured and retiring early. In an extremely even race, when the first eight men finished within one minute, the Belgian Goegebeur defended his victory. The blond handsome guy, who was already thinking about the back door in the family butcher shop, decided everything by surging two kilometers before the finish line. In the women's race, he was imitated by Russia's Guzel Tazetdinová. She, as a clear favorite, repeated her journey to the highest stage after a year, just like her Belgian counterpart.

In addition to the winners, another story caught the attention of fans and journalists. It was associated with the name of Jozef Česla. You can browse through it in several places in the KPM chronicle. For the first time back in 1949 and the last time on October 6, 1996, when he was able to conquer the half-marathon here at the age of 87.

Gradually, an increasingly rich accompanying program was formed, which can be seen in the fact that up to two mini-marathons were organized, one on Saturday and another on Sunday, while the youth also got another space in the form of junior races on a small road circuit.

The year 1996 was also rich in important events in Košice. Already on April 1, the building of the Košice branch of Slovak national bank with a distinctly designer concept of architecture was put into operation, and two weeks later, on April 15, the Tyrolean Airways connecting Košice with Vienna for the first time became a reality.

In 1996, production at the magnesite plants, whose activity dates back to 1901, was also stopped. However, these processes later significantly contributed to soil and air pollution in the city. The magnesite plants themselves were, until the establishment of VSŽ, the largest production facility in the city.

Sunday has been dedicated to the marathon in Košice for almost forever.

That is, with the exception of the period when the marathon was organized on any day falling on the national holiday of October 28. Since 1952, it was supposed to be only Sundays, but even here there were exceptions. First in 1964, when the Tokyo Olympics marathon was held on Saturday 8 August, and again, albeit for a different reason, in 1997. This time the IAAF World Half Marathon Championships had a hand in it. Saturday came into play again. In the sun-drenched city, the morning belonged first to the athletes who fought their way to the World Championships, and in the afternoon the runners tiredly paced the twice-long course in another of the KPM years.

In the time sequence, priority was given to the championship, assigned to Košice thanks to a precisely managed candidacy, rich tradition and strong organizational background. Slovakia has never hosted the World Championships in athletics before or since. Thousands of hours of work were reflected in an almost flawless course, and the entire preparation also paid off in the form of invaluable experience used later to advance the marathon itself. Pictures from Košice literally went around the world through the broadcasting of the Eurosport station. And they captured everything. The men's great performances, when up to three of them broke the one-hour mark, the women's triumph of Tegla Loroupe, who was hard to beat at the time, and the entire festive color of the championship. And finally, the satisfied smile of IAAF President Primo Nebiolo caught on camera while congratulating the best.

After the decoration of the new world champions, there was a rarely seen mobilization to prepare the square and the track for the afternoon marathon, so that it would not lag behind the previous years. And fears that the people of Košice, fed up with the morning's gala performance, would rather stay at home when they were tired turned out to be unnecessary. On the contrary, the streets were probably even more crowded. And they applauded the somewhat unexpected winner, Moroccan My Tahar Echchadli. To this day, the more initiated know that he was coached by Gabriel Valiska, who later also coached our Olympian Katka Berešová.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

The dynamic development of aviation and the introduction of new types of aircraft requires constant investment in basic infrastructure.

From this point of view, the year 1997 brought, among other things, a significant improvement in air transport conditions for Košice. The completion of the large-scale reconstruction of the take-off, landing and check-in areas is tied to this year. The length of the runway itself grew to 3,100 m, the width reached 60 m even with the side strips, and all this has since then enabled the largest type of aircraft with the maximum wingspan to land and, of course, take-off in Košice.

After the extraordinary tension associated with the organization of the World Championship in the half-marathon in 1998, everything seemed to return to the old ways.

Of course, only apparently. After all, the preparation of every marathon started, and still starts today, practically from scratch. At the end of the effort, it was October 4, 1998, and with it a day of the Polish triumphs, when athletes from the country of our northern neighbors dominated the men's and women's competition. However, the biggest star and favorite before the start was someone else. South African William Mtolo arrived in Košice with a personal best of 2:08:15 and the business card of the winner of the marathon in New York in 1992. He did not do badly, but in relatively cold and windy weather he had to settle for second place, when the well-prepared Andrzej Krzyściński was beyond his strength. In addition to Košice, during his career he made a significant impact in the American city of Austin, where he even managed to win three times, and in 2001 in a significantly improved personal best of 2:11:42.

If Mtolo should have been nervous about anyone before the start, it was not Krzyściński, but his compatriot Białk, who was starting with a much more interesting calling card. In the end, however, it was of little use to him, because in the results we can only find him among those who did not finish the race. And in the same DNF section, in 1998, the name of Robert Štefko also appeared. However, it was planned for him, as he covered the track with number 13 only until he successfully fulfilled his role as the rabbit and pace guard. When asked when we will finally see him at the finish line, he answered that one day for sure. And as we will learn on the next pages, we didn't have to wait long.

In 1998, the highest ranked Slovak runner finished in the top ten. This was last year's half-marathon winner Vladislav Lipovský from Strážske, for whom it was his Košice marathon premiere. And immediately decorated with the title of champion of Slovakia. He didn't do badly in the following years either, but we'll talk more about that in one of the next chapters.

Let's just say that the domestic runners did well, too, when we could see them on two steps of the ceremonial podium. However, the total number of female competitors was still low. In this year, it even coincided with the premier year of 1980. And that was certainly not a very flattering certificate for anyone.

A nice moment for the victorious Krzyściński. He started in Košice a total of three times during his career. His finished record is 2-1-5.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

The historic town hall of the city of Košice, built in the years 1779-1780, gradually had different uses, but the ravages of time mercilessly took its toll on its condition. The city therefore decided on an extensive reconstruction of the building, and today it is mainly used for representative and protocol purposes. The ceremonial opening of the renovated premises took place on May 7, 1998.

Well, another important event is also connected to this year and month. The climax of the Košice City Day celebrations was the performance of the world-famous Italian tenor Luciano Pavarotti. The concert took place on May 16 in the amphitheater with an audience capacity of 12,000 seats at the time, which was filled not only by residents of Košice, but also by many foreign visitors.

If we look at the growth curve of runners' interest in the marathon in Košice, we can see that it started to rise just at the turn of the century.

At the end of the twentieth century, more precisely in 1999, in the comments after the race, Slovakian victories were mainly emphasized. For the last time. Later, the increasing competition, but also the gradual stagnation of the domestic scene, did not bring such firsts. The exception was then the only covid year 2020. However, the marathon was held in a shortened form and without foreign participation.

If any of the local runners had a chance to win in those years, it was definitely Róbert Štefko. The native of Košice knew the local track well. Although he completed the entire marathon here only once before, as a test in 1990, he had since acted as a rabbit for the front group of competitors many times. The last time was during the fight between Mtola and Krzyściń in 1998.

This time the goal was different. Štefko started as a clear favorite, also thanks to his still fresh London personal best of 2:09:53. And in the end, he managed it without much difficulty, the third native of Košice in the history of this marathon to do so. The holder of Slovak records from 3000 meters to the marathon, a participant in the Olympic Games and all important championships, thus kept his promise that, in addition to his other plans, he will definitely concentrate fully on the marathon in his hometown.

Katarína Jedináková from Kežmarok accompanied him on the highest step. Although her career unfolded less brilliantly than Štefko's, she must definitely be included among the brave pioneers of the Slovak women's marathon. Even though her first place was a surprise for many, for her it must have meant great satisfaction after years of honest preparation.

In addition to everything necessary, the marathon also managed to commemorate the 75th anniversary of its founding and did so in a very sympathetic way. The publication of a cross-sectional book publication, which seems to have started a later fruitful authorial era, accompanied by the baptisms of other marathon stories and chronicles in 2004, 2008, 2014 and finally now in 2024.

Fast and successful integration into international structures was benefited in 1999 by an extraordinary diplomatic success. Košice welcomed more than 100 delegates of the world congress of the marathon association AIMS. Several of them were happy to return to the oldest marathon in Europe later.

Eastern Slovakia was paralyzed by a snowstorm on February 10-14, 1999, and the city of Košice itself was one of the most affected. Thousands of people couldn't get to work, the city center was covered in meter-long snowdrifts, public transport completely collapsed and the airport was also closed. The authorities declared a state of emergency and on February 11, not even a daily newspaper was published.

2000 ONE EYE ON SYDNEY

The marathon in Košice in 2000 started literally just a few minutes after we learned the name of the new Olympic winner at the Games in Sydney.

Among the opponents, it was undoubtedly the career highlight for Róbert Štefko, the last winner of the Košice Peace Marathon. His well-timed form was buried by an acute illness at the race venue, and so the dream of a good position, perhaps even in the top ten finish, unfortunately vanished.

Meanwhile, in Košice, the track record, which had been attacked in vain for years, was repeatedly talked about, almost to the point of exhaustion. Believe it. Since 1978 and the then Korean record, a lot of water had already flowed through Hornád. However, even after 22 years, the hopes placed in the elite runners were not fulfilled.

Ernest Kipyego, making his debut in the marathon, was perhaps the least dissatisfied. Although he did not increase the bonus for the victory with the bonus for setting a record, he made up for everything later. That's when he gradually won several more interesting championships and moved his maximum down to 2:09:55.

In 2000, it happened for the first time ever that all three finishers in the men's race were dominated by Africans. Later, the podium order was mixed up a few more times, but the trend of emerging African dominance was already apparent.

In the women's category, the champion of Russia, Yelena Gundelakh, did not meet the expectations. She surprisingly lost to the significantly weaker (on paper) Czech Ivana Martinčová. It is to the credit of the likable winner that, despite the ever-decreasing chances for a more significant finishing position, she was very happy to return to Košice for the entire next decade.

Among the wheelchair users preparing for the Paralympics in Sydney, the fastest native Daniel Kukla was once again on the course. His start under five rings worked out better than Štefko's, when he finished in a solid 20th place in distant Australia.

For the first time ever, the logo representing the U. S. Steel company appeared among the those of the marathon supporters. And it is necessary to add and also to be thankful that afterwards it has not been missing even once.

2001 FINALLY A CHANGE

In 2001, the marathon program was immediately enriched with two unique competitions.

Košice became the venue for the World Championships of the International Sports Union of Railwaymen USIC and at the same time for the European Championships for visually impaired and blind runners. And the athletes who came to both mentioned competitions from 20 countries of the world were not lost even in the absolute order. And another interesting premiere awaited the organizers and fans that year. For the first time, inline skaters also took to the track. All this mainly thanks to the way in which this industry began to gradually gain more and more attention in our country. Athletes on narrow wheels have thus joined the wheelchair athletes who have been competing in Košice since 1990. And together, for many years, they created the first starting wave opening the entire competition program on the first Sunday of October.

Again, the same questions and controversies hovered over the marathon itself. That is, whether it will finally be possible to beat the relatively ancient course record set 23 years ago by a Korean runner with the difficult to pronounce last name of Go. The chance was there, of course, because even now several athletes with better personal bests appeared at the start. Among them, even then, only the 23-year-old defender of last year's victory, Ernest Kipyego, was improving in March of that year in Naples. It was he who decided to set the pace at the very beginning and at the turn forced the judges to stop the stopwatch at a promising looking intermediate time of 1:05:08. His compatriot David Kariuki started the second lap with at a distance of 20 seconds behind him. Both of them were gradually running out of strength, but Kariuki managed to spread his out a little more wisely, and he finally broke the course record, although narrowly, by only 7 seconds.

An excellent fourth place belonged to the native Vladislav Lipovský, the already mentioned easterner from Strážské, and the champion of the railway association USIC Pole Radoslaw Dudycz finished in sixth place overall in a time of 2:19:28.

In the women's race, Ukrainian runner Galina Zhulyeva prevailed in a solo performance ahead of a pair of competitors from the Czech Republic. A third Czech runner, course record holder Alena Peterková, could also have shuffled the cards. However, despite her announced arrival in Košice, she did not appear in the end.

He ran out wearing number 2 and in just over two hours became a celebrated number one. David Kariuki rewrote the long-standing course record, set by the Korean Go 23 years before.

The first year of the new millennium also brought the first start of inline skaters to Košice. Dušan Vlach and Malgorzata Miková took the titles at the premiere.

Vladislav Lipovský in the arms of those closest to him. His fourth start in Košice turned into a fourth place finish with a career-best of 2:18:33.

Ukrainian Galina Zhulyeva (24) cleverly hid herself and left in a group of her male colleagues. Otherwise, she didn't save herself at all. From April 2001 to March 2002, she won marathons in addition to Košice in Pisa, Livorno and Barcelona.

Rails can be found all over the world, so as part of the USIC championship, a delegation of athletes - railway workers from faraway India - visited Košice.

A helping hand is always ready. Erika Semanová is supported at the finish line of the half marathon by race doctor Braňo Bohuš (right) and KPM starter Štefan Hrušovský.

This is how the three fastest runners who started in Košice in 2001 at the European Championships for the Visually Impaired and Blind stood on the podium.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

Košice became the seat of the Košice Self-Governing Region in 2001, based on the Act on Self-Government of Higher Territorial Units. The first ever meeting of the KSK council took place on December 19, 2001.

If any of the readers remember the so-called tram "triplets", then it was possible to see them for the last time in 2001. They were tram sets consisting of three carriages that ran to the ironworks on the well-known R line during peak hours.

On June 9, 2001, Arno Puskáš died at the age of 76 – a prominent climber, publicist, but also photographer and graphic artist. He came from Košice, made over two hundred Tatra first ascents, participated in expeditions to Nanga Parbat, and became well-known thanks to the ten volumes of the book "Mountain Guide - High Tatras."

Once the bad luck breaks, it is often possible to experience a string of happy moments.

In the case of the marathon, it wasn't a string, but having the course record rewritten twice in a row after long years of waiting must have been pleasing. And David Kariuki had a hand in it again. After last year's victory in Košice, he "ran" to Dubai for sixth place in January and was already asking his manager where he would go next. He had good cards in his hand and another start for the defender in Košice was easily arranged.

Here, even at the turn, everything was open. The quartet of later medalists was joined by the South African Dhlomo, so we waited to see what would happen. It was the same as last year. Together with Dobrzynski, Kariuki quickly shed the runners from the Cape of Good Hope, and in the dramatic finish itself, an African runner seven years older showed more strength.

It should be added that in the race we were also waiting to see how the winner from Boston, Lameck Aguta, would fare. After his great triumph, he overcame his own, survived a severe car accident and trauma when, instead of the expected help, he was robbed after this incident. Although Aguta tried his best to return to the scene, he found understanding in Košice, but he did not reach the finish line of this marathon.

If we take a look behind the scenes of the preparations, we will see that the effort to communicate with the world as intensively as possible in 2002 translated into several personal meetings and presentations throughout Europe. Gradually, the 25 km race in Berlin and then the marathons in Prague and Stockholm became such stops. And in addition to everything, the personalities of the past years were not forgotten either. It so happened that František Kania from Košice, undoubtedly one of the most prominent figures of the domestic scene in the 1960s, did not miss the congratulations on his 70th birthday. Kania, who, in addition to competing on the track, also decided to run a marathon, did his best at home in 1963. At that time, not even knowing that with a time of 2:30:32 he improved the best Slovak performance in the marathon up to that time. Its previous holder was Ján Takáč, an Easterner living and racing in Prague for almost a quarter of a century.

David Kariuki stood in 2002 under the poster capturing him during last year's victory. The scenario was repeated almost to the letter.

Kariuki with number 1 is being taken around by proven rabbit and KPM winner from 1999 Róbert Štefko.

Tadelach Birra stands alone on the top step, and this seems to reflect her distance in the race itself. She beat her opponents by more than 10 minutes.

At this moment it was clear that Kariuki would defend the title and will improve the track record again. The organizers raised their hands before him.

After the race, everyone could put off urgent duties for a while. The organizers met (from left) Braňo Bohuš, Jožo Klink, Miro Lakatoš and Gusto Halaša.

*On May 11, 2002, Slovakia won the title of World Ice Hockey Champions for the first time in the history of its independence. It happened in Gothenburg, Sweden, after the final victory over Russia. In Košice this year, on August 23 to be exact, a unique Aviation Museum was established. It is located in the area of Košice Airport and today it presents almost 500 exhibits. Not to be missed among them is the collection of presidential planes, which was created from donations from heads of state and government and was founded by President Rudolf Schuster.

The end of the year then belonged to the celebration of the 500th anniversary of the city coat-of-arms in the form in which we have known it since 1502. This whole event culminated on December 8 at the Lower Gate with the unveiling of a bronze sculpture of the coat of arms from the studio of the academic sculptor Arpád Račko.

2003 FROM KOŠICE TO ATHENS

Three previous, consecutive African victories already signaled the coming dominance of this continent on the marathon course in Košice.

But the year 2003 seemed to deny this trend for a while. Lest there be no Africans at the start. The organizers even arranged for the return of Shem Kororia, world champion in the half-marathon from 1997, but even that was not enough to prevent European runners from dominating the men's and women's races. In the period photographs, we see the victorious Belarusian Yelena Mazovka at the finish line, and by her side one of the local marathon stars, Pavel Obraz. He gallantly let her go in front of him, but it must be added that many other Slovak runners did not avoid applause and camera viewfinders this year either. This was especially Marcel Matanin, who finished in an excellent fourth place and decorated his marathon debut with a time of 2:17:55. And that certainly helped him qualify for the Olympics in Athens a year later. It should be added here that for a long time, up to the publication of this book, his was the last start of a Slovak marathoner under the five rings.

In Košice in 2003, the Russian Georgiy Andreyev overpowered everyone, starting a very successful career here, which was also decorated with starts at the Olympics in Athens and Beijing.

And what else is worth mentioning? Certainly the rain that sprinkled the streets of the city, but also the 100th marathon of Juraj Fotul, a well-known running enthusiast, whose first start in 1968 we also written about elsewhere. And in the chronicles of the period, we can also find the first half-marathon, which was organized on June 21, 2003, by the organizers of the Marathon Club on the route from Košice to Seňa. That is, on a track that belonged to the autumn running holiday for many decades.

Great determination oozed from the runners just after the start of KPM 2003. However, not everyone could be happy with their result in the end.

What is Pole Dobrzynski (2) looking at? The runners are approaching the turn and in a moment they will go in the opposite direction.

Shem Kororia (3), world half marathon champion from Košice, lost to the fastest already in the first part of the race. In the end, he finished, but he could not be satisfied with his eighth place.

With this victory in Košice, Andreyev came closer to participating in the Olympics in Athens.

Homegrown Marcel Matanin was also beaming with satisfaction at the finish line. A successful debut brought him an almost certain place in the games under the five rings.

A couple who, although unplanned, spent a lot of time together on the track. The winner Yelena Mazovka and Pavol Obraz.

A frequent guest of the KPM at that time was the founder of the marathon in Prague, Carlo Capalbo.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY

Due to the boom in public transport, especially the tram, there were also necessary renovations in Košice. In 2003, a large-scale replacement of the course surface on the street Južna trieda was done, along with the construction of barrier-free boarding islands, and the entrance tracks in the entrance area of the ironworks were also modernized.

In May 2003, the East Slovakian Water Company was established in Košice through the transformation of the former state-owned enterprise, whose main program is the production and distribution of drinking and industrial water, as well as the operation of sewers and wastewater treatment plants.

2004 ▶ TURŇA AGAIN ON THE MAP

The year in which this event commemorated its 80th anniversary brought another important achievement in the form of mapping the history of the oldest marathon in Europe.

From the pen of Miroslav Hazucha and a group of co-authors, a valuable publication dedicated to the founder of the marathon Vojtech Bukovský was born. In addition to many well-known facts, it also provides a detailed overview of the Košice sports scene before the creation of an independent Czechoslovakia, and valuable examples of Bukovský correspondence with friends, co-organizers and representatives of the sports events at that time are also valuable.

And one more event connected with the history of the marathon is now worth mentioning. In the village of Turnňa nad Bodvou, a monument commemorating the place of the first start was unveiled. This festive moment became the impetus for a special relay, composed mainly of runners loyal to the Košice Marathon for many years, to complete the course on Saturday, October 2, 2004, which was covered by the first marathon pioneers in 1924.

More than 2,000 participants of individual disciplines took to the streets of the city the next morning in really pleasant autumn weather. All eyes were mainly focused on the fastest ones, but despite the previous promise, the current track record holder and two-time winner of this race, David Kariuki, did not appear among them. The path to victory thus opened up for several of the co-favorites. Even one who had stood on the podium here twice in the past. Pole Adam Dobrzynski, after winning a bronze and silver, did not let the victory slip away this time and literally outclassed his competition by more than three minutes. Well, the women's race recognized a truly unique winner shortly after. For the first time in history, a runner from the land of the rising sun, Rika Tabashi, took the title, imitating her compatriot Takeshi So standing on the highest step back in 1976.

In 2004, a new book publication dedicated to the founder of the marathon, Vojtech Bukovský, was presented. On the right is its author Miroslav Hazucha, on the left the then president of the Marathon Club, Štefan Daňo.

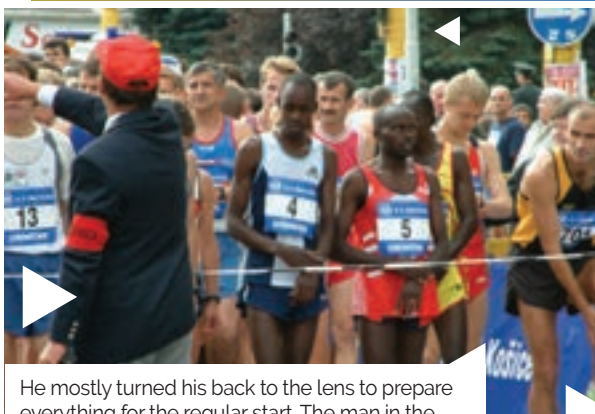

The unveiling of the commemorative plaque in the village of Turňa nad Bodvou, near the place where the first marathon started in 1924, must have pleased everyone.

And from Turňa, after 80 years, they ran to Košice again. Peter Buc, Jaroslav Horný, Jarmila Suniarová, Milan Furin and Ladislav Ivanko also formed one part of such a relay.

Ľudmila Šušňová was recognized by spectators in Košice and elsewhere in the world by her special running clothes. Even at the age of 72, she presented herself on the mini marathon track.

He mostly turned his back to the lens to prepare everything for the regular start. The man in the typical red cap in those years was the long-time athletic referee Miroslav Lakatoš.

If you want to take pictures with Japanese runners, you often have to bend your knees a little. In the case of Jozef Klink, a long-time member of the organizing committee, this was doubly true due to his height. On the right, eventual winner Rika Tabashi.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

Since 2004, two fundamental socio-political changes have started to influence events throughout the country and thus also in Košice. By handing over the accession protocols, Slovakia achieved formal NATO membership on March 29, and a month later, on May 1, 2004, we became a member of the European Union.

Even before that, a meeting of the presidents of Slovakia, Hungary, Poland and the Czech Republic took place in Košice on March 11-12.

And the act, which took place at the very end of the year, also had an international dimension. In December, a statue of the prominent Hungarian writer Sándor Márai, who was born in Košice and who has always been proud of his hometown, was unveiled in the city center.

2005 ▶ EVEN STARS GO INCOGNITO

Each of us knows, or at least guesses, what it means if someone comes incognito.

That is, inconspicuously, secretly, unrecognized. Well, Ron Hill somehow appeared in Košice in 2005. In this book, we write about him without secrecy in the chapters dated 1974 and 2014, but we must do so now. The legendary runner, decorated with world records, a European title and a victory in Boston, appeared in Košice at the last minute and made himself known with just a touch. During his business trip in these corners of Europe, he visited places that he got to know well long ago. Always in motion, always in shape, and so at the age of 67 he ran a half marathon in a respectable time of 1:47 hours, only to reappear 9 years later and fill other pages of our chronicle.

Ron Hill was at the half-distance finish line in 2005, that is, before we could hang the obligatory wreath around the marathon winner's neck. However, we waited a little longer for this moment than everyone wanted. Because the winning times of the African athletes were certainly not dazzling this year, and almost all of the favorites fell significantly short of their personal bests. That's just how it goes in a marathon sometimes.

The names of two British runners can also be found on the leading rungs, which reflected the slightly more active communication between the organizers of the KPM and the AAA, that is, the British Amateur Athletic Association, in those years. Perhaps even more interesting than the runners themselves was the leader of this small expedition. After 19 years, Steve Brace visited Košice. This may not say much to readers, but he was one of the best representatives of the British running school of an era. He started in Košice back in 1986, but his best period came a little later. In addition to the starts at the Olympics in Barcelona and Atlanta, there were also victories at the marathons in Paris and Berlin in 1990 and 1991.

If we described the times of the male winners in 2005 as only average, the same must be said when evaluating the women's competition. If you would like to debate whether this is really the case, a kind of mathematical-statistical comparison can also help. According to the World Athletics tables, the performance of the fastest man in Košice that year was worth 1,062 points, while 1,058 points can be assigned to the time of the Polish Lewandowska. As you can see, they had nothing to envy.

2006 TRIBUTE TO ZABALA

If we look at the marathon program in 2006, we see that the main tent was still set up in the pedestrian zone at the Lower Gate before the start. Well, that wasn't to last long. An ever-increasing number of runners was already demanding change.

The marathon gradually changed and became a multi-genre festival with concerts, exhibitions and a growing expo. The year 2006 was, among other things, the year of the birth of the project "In the Footsteps of Marathon Legends". The first protagonist was Juan Carlos Zabala, whose famous victory and later Olympic triumph were remembered even 75 years later. His followers were high school students who were supposed to try to beat his time of 2:33:19 in a relay. It was beyond their strength, but the young runners, dressed in replicas of Zabal's vertically striped Argentine jersey, could not be embarrassed and brought to life with dignity a project linking the past with the present of the marathon in Košice. The project gradually brought many interesting ideas, often enhanced by the personal presence of legendary athletes. Even after years, those who came received the rightful attention in the metropolis of the East.

The race itself then belonged to the young Kenyan runner Edwin Kipchom, who was still just starting out in the world of marathons. He clearly had the most strength in the balanced field of favorites and managed to leave up to five of his compatriots behind in the top ten, who at that time had a much richer results gallery. Among the women, all the steps on the podium belonged to European women. The highest one was for Natalia Kulesh from Belarus, whose competition entries were most often associated with entries in Poland at the time. In Košice, she lost her biggest pursuer by a whopping five minutes.

In the men's race, the youngest of the co-favorites won. Edwin Kimuto proved was able to improve his performance from Košice only 10 years later, in Brescia, Italy, and even then by just one second.

The project "In the Footsteps of Marathon Legends" was presented for the first time. It was dedicated to Zabala. Katka Pejpková Berešová (42), then 19, led his followers to the finish line. Behind her with number 1 is Igor Klema, now a long-time member of the marathon organizing team in Košice.

In addition to serious competition, the audience also enjoyed watching the Brides Run.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

In 2006, after the extensive reconstruction of the former Jiskra barracks, the Constitutional Court of the Slovak Republic moved to a new integrated complex at Hlavná ulica (Main Street) no. 110, where it undoubtedly found better conditions for his work than before in the building of the Csáky-Dessewfy Palace.

When the reconstruction of the L.Troják Winter Arena began in 1996, no one had any idea that the ceremonial opening would not take place until February 24, 2006. The multi-functional stadium, named Steel Arena, later won the Building of the Year award. In the same year, another important impulse came to this event. Košice won the right to host the 2011 Ice Hockey World Championships.

2007 A BARRIER OVERCOME

Even today, a time of 2 hours and 10 minutes for a men's marathon is considered a standard limit of exceptional performance.

It was overcome in Košice for the first time in 2007, although competitors with the potential to conquer it had appeared here many years before. Let's mention Ron Hill, Waldemar Cierpinski, Derek Clayton or Ahmed Salah. But we had to wait for Wiliam Biama from the group of the extremely successful manager Federico Rosa. His father, Gabriele, founded one of the first systematically working training groups in Kenya and thus helped pave the way for Africans to win.

Wiliam Biama reached the finish line with a comfortable lead of more than 2 minutes, all this in ideal running weather, when the thermometer showed only 6 degrees in the morning and the mercury column did not even rise above 15 at noon. Despite the fact that Biama later started often in marathons in France or in Slovenia's Ljubljana, he never bettered his best performance from Košice. The women's race belonged to defending champion Natália Kulesh. Even she was unable to beat her time in Košice later.

Among other things, the marathon was dedicated to the memory of the French runner Desiré Leriche, the winner from seven decades before. Those who wish to relive his extraordinary story once more, turn back a few pages and start at the chapter dated 1937.

The rich accompanying program also brought an interesting combination of the marathon with a well-attended jazz festival. And so runners and fans could listen to musicians from exotic countries as well as domestic regulars, such as local stars Peter Lipa and Robo Opatovský. But not only music stars attracted attention. The three-time Olympic champion Jan Železný, the phenomenal javelin thrower, applauded the marathoners from the stands. He would certainly like to applaud his former colleague from Dukla Banská Bystrica, Miroslav Vanko. After a successful career on the track, he decided to make his marathon debut this year. Even with aspirations for the Olympic limit to Beijing. It remained in the attempt. Even today, the abbreviation DNF still shines next to his name.

Many weeks before the start, another certification of the course was waiting for the organizers. The KPM chief referee for many years and course builder Emil Rusko could announce its successful completion.

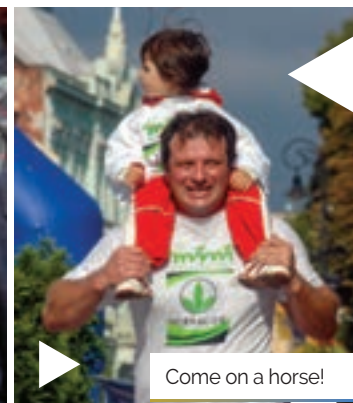

Miroslav Vanko longed for the next Olympics. In Atlanta 1996, he competed in track. In Beijing 2008, he wanted to try the marathon. However, his attack on the limit in Košice did not succeed.

The second line of runners had an interesting form. Marcel Matanin is in the foreground with number 11.

In March 2007, the Košice IT Valley Association was established as a joint initiative of educational institutions, public administration and leading IT companies focusing on strengthening the IT sector in the region of eastern Slovakia, which at that time already employed more than 10,000 workers. In 2011, the association was formally transformed into a cluster and today it already has more than 50 members.

From the moment of its creation, the cluster focused not only on increasing the expertise of its members, but especially on ensuring that this ecosystem, which connects companies and educational institutions, functions as well as possible and brings new necessary competences to the region.

2008 YEAR OF VETERANS

The year 2008 in Košice was marked by further gradual growth in the number of participants, African victories and the overall advancement of a diverse marathon event.

However, there were also fewer encouraging moments. In March, the immediate family and the public said their last goodbyes to the long-time chairman of the organizing committee, Ján Margit, who headed it from 1961 to 1984. And then in the fall, a runner associated with this race in the first years of Margit's era arrived in Košice for the last time. Three-time winner Pavel Kantorek was happy to decorate the stage with the students who performed in his honor in the well-known relay race.

Let's stay for a moment with those born earlier and mention that even then 80-year-old František Zikeš completed the marathon, and another, the very last man to reach the finish line, was a man with an interesting life story. He was Vincent Obšitník, born in Moravany near Michalovce, whose parents emigrated to the United States even before the outbreak of the Second World War. He returned to his homeland repeatedly. In the period we are writing about, also as the American ambassador to Slovakia.

At the opposite end of the results list, we find mainly the names of African runners. The men's championship in Košice was won by the Ethiopian Dejene Yirdawe, who a year later would stand on the silver podium in Seoul, South Korea, after a personal best of 2:08:30. In the women's race, Selima Chelimo from Kenya dominated, but later there was certainly more talk about the second in line, the Ethiopian Firehiwot Dado. After her debut in Košice, she successively won several championships, the most valuable in 2011 in New York.

Well, it was certainly a memorable year for several Slovak runners, too. Jaroslav Horný and Július Kálavský from Košice each ran their 100th marathon, and Alexander Simon from Žilina his 500th. And there was another interesting milestone. It had been 100 years since today's marathon distance was measured for the first time at the London Games at the current length of 42,195 meters. Why and under what circumstances it happened is for another, longer story.

Vincent Obsitnik with the number 858 was born a few tens of kilometers from Košice, but he lived his whole life overseas. His start in Košice in 2008 was interesting in many ways.

The popular Matej Cifra, alias Sajfa, also completed his marathon premiere in Košice. He has returned several times, often with a microphone in hand.

On September 9, 2008, a large-scale reconstruction of the historical building of the East Slovak Museum began, while the transformation also affected the previously unused attic spaces. After this renovation, the building received a new roof, an exhibition maisonette and barrier-free elevators.

This year, the project of the University Library of the Technical University in Košice was also implemented, which attracted attention with its interesting, stepped auditorium, visible even when viewed from the outside.

2009 STILL A FRESH CHAMPION

Rare guests, heroes of past times, found the past to Košice more and more often in these years trip.

Such was the arrival of the two-time Olympic champion Waldemar Cierpinski. In the past, he did not convert any of his five Košice starts into a victory, but the gold medals from Montreal and Moscow indisputably rank him among the greatest figures in the history of the world marathon. He arrived in Košice shortly before his 60th birthday, but still fresh and in good shape, which he proved even on the course, when he and the students enjoyed the last kilometer of the junior relay bearing his name.

After a long time, the race itself was also decorated with a new course record for women. Ukrainian Olena Burkovská took care of that, rewriting Alena Peterková's twenty-year-old record with her performance. Olena continued her running career for several more years, decorated with a start at the Olympics in London and several valuable finishes. In 2009, no one could have guessed under what moving circumstances she would return to Košice after many years.

The men's race was conducted by African competitors. Jacob Kipkorir was given starting number 4, which seems to indicate that he is not expected to be on the podium. However, he turned these considerations upside down and the four at the start became number one at the finish line. Among the local runners, Imrich Pástor, who finished in 10th place, was the most successful, and only one rung behind him, we welcomed former Olympian Peter Tichý, dressed in the ŠK Čadca jersey in those years, at the finish line.

And let's mention one more moment associated with the year 2009. Guests, runners and organizers found their roof over their heads again in places that have been connected with the marathon since its inception. Of course, always in a slightly different form. After the Schalkáz Hotel, which was later replaced by Slovan on the same site, the DoubleTree by Hilton hotel was opened in 2009 after extensive renovation at the corner of Hlavná and Štúrová streets.

The first photo of this chapter deservedly belongs to Waldemar Cierpinski. The Olympic champion from Montreal and Moscow returned to Košice, now with silvered hair, but still in excellent condition.

Even from this shot it can be seen that the last ones can be the first ones. Jacob Chesire (4), the shortest in height, left all his opponents behind. Even those with a longer stride.

František Bednár (526) is perhaps even envious of his friends with red numbers who are heading to the finish line of the half marathon. He still has one full lap ahead of him.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

Even when looking at the year 2009, we must mention a fundamental societal change that goes beyond the narrow view of life in the city of Košice.

On January 1, 2009, Slovakia became a member of the eurozone and the single European currency - the euro - officially began to apply throughout the territory. It was also the year when the building of the former tobacco factory was rebuilt into a cultural and social center intended for various theater, dance, music and multimedia productions. Thus began the "new life" of Tabačka, which was supported by the Bona Fide civic association and which gradually grew thanks to further investments by the municipality and the operators themselves. And from May 1, 2009, the Hradová observation tower, built above the city in 1987 at an elevation of 466 m, was made available again.

2010 ▶ REMEMBRANCE OF PHEIDIPPIDES

In 2010, it was time to remember the winners more intensively.

Three decades had passed since the first women's start, and that was also the reason that among the guests there were several of those whose names were gradually added to the pylon under the statue of the marathon runner. The longest journey, all the way from Wuppertal, had to be measured by Christa Vahlensieck, whose surname was cast in bronze by Arpád Račko most often. Skilled five times.

She and her colleagues felt good in Košice even after years. Šárka Balcarová, Alena Peterková, Ludmila Melicherová and Katarína Jedináková also proved it on the course, when they enjoyed the atmosphere of packed streets on a special relay team.

The race itself brought higher quality and then a very dramatic ending in the men's competition. This is evidenced by the fact that all three medalists finished in a time better than that of Biama's course record from 2007. His compatriot Gilbert Chepkwony overtook it by almost a minute and a half thanks to the attacks of his opponents, who finally fell short by less than 10 seconds. And this performance was definitely not lost in the flood of others. It was the ninth best time of a winner of a European marathon in 2010. In this respect, Košice also surpassed competitions in Rome, Barcelona, Milan, Vienna or Hamburg.

The women seem to want to leave the glory and attention to their already mentioned predecessors, because the times of the medalists this year did not dazzle too much.

It is also worth mentioning that this year saw the last marathon completed in Košice by František Zikeš from Frýdek-Místek. He completed the course at the age of 82, becoming the oldest runner ever to do so.

Well, the entire marathon world was also looking much more intensively into distant history during this period.

It has been around 2,500 years since, according to the legend of the time, the legendary Pheidippides reached the city under the Acropolis with a message of victory. And the organizers of the marathon in Košice were not absent from the dignified celebrations of those moments.

Although Gilbert Chepkwony ran the second half of the course significantly faster than the first, he was able to get rid of his rivals only in the last meters.

The excellent sports journalist and publicist Marián Šimo was almost never absent among the regular guests of the marathon.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

At the beginning of June 2010, the districts of Ťahanovce, Sever, Džungľa and Krásna nad Hornádom were affected by floods. On June 4, up to 2,000 residents of these locations were evacuated due to the dangerously rising Hornád.

At approximately the same time, in the first days of June, the Holy Father Benedict XVI received Renunciation of the office of Archbishop of Košice Archdiocese Mons. A. Weaver. At the same time, he appointed a new Košice archbishop - metropolitan. He became the previous auxiliary bishop Mons. Bernard Bober, who ceremonially took over the office on July 10 at 10:00 a.m. in St. Elizabeth's Cathedral.

In the pre-Olympic year, athletes all over the world were already pushing the limits to London.

There weren't that many of them in Košice, but we still had irons in the fire. At the time, only 24-year-old Katarína Berešová, later also known as Pejpková, took to the start, and she did not do badly in her marathon debut. In a time of 2:43:42, she finished in fifth place overall, and in this mood set off for another attempt four weeks later, this time in Frankfurt, Germany. Here, she put her training to good use and finally won her ticket to the upcoming Olympics. Let's remind you that in Košice, Belarus' Maryna Damantsevich was above Bereš's strength, as well as that of the other opponents. She returned a year later for another championship and later made her mark with fourth place at the European Championships in Berlin in 2018.

A rather unique situation occurred in the men's race. Elijah Kemboi's name also appeared among the favorites. He arrived with a personal best of 2:11:15 written on his business card after a victory in Antwerp. In Košice, he not only repeated the championship from the city of diamonds, but the judges also credited him with an identical time. Those in the know must have been reminded of the story of the Russian Sergei Popov. If you read this book carefully, you will easily discover it in the chapters with the years 1959 and 1963.

While among the women we were able to highlight the already mentioned Berešová, the local men did not do so well at home. A more prominent personality was missing, so we registered Imrich Magayar from Nové Zámky as the highest. The latter was able to beat Berešová by "only" 4 minutes in the comparison of national first-place finishers, which is perhaps the closest such difference in the history of the Košice marathon.

Along with those who tried to reach the highest goals on October 2, 2011, the stars of the past were once again remembered. This time, perhaps for the most difficult one. Half a century had passed since the moment when Košice was literally dying of curiosity. Half a century since the arrival and clear victory of two-time Olympic champion Abebe Bikila.

Before the best got to speak, children from Košice schools demonstrated their talent in the Athletics program. They were certainly not lacking in enthusiasm.

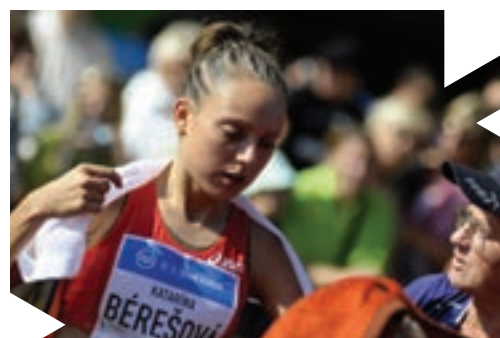

The year 2011 was dedicated to the memory of Abebe Bikila. Fifty years had passed since his start in Košice. His compatriots also showed up at the bronze bust of the two-time Olympic champion, but on Sunday, October 2, they could not imitate him.

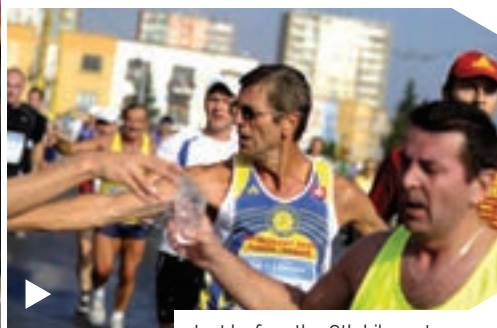

And the children got their space in the next program as well. The mini marathon in Košice has been attracting and inspiring them for decades.

The victorious Kemboi fought in the second part of the course only against the stopwatch. When they stopped, he had to shake his head, too.

Katarína Pejpková Berešová could have been satisfied with her debut. Encouraged by this result, she traveled to Frankfurt a few weeks later to definitely win her ticket to the Olympics in London.

Just before the 8th kilometer, one of the many refreshment stations is waiting for the runners every year. It's always so busy here.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

For many months, Košice was preparing for an extraordinary event, which was the 75th ice hockey world championship. One group phase and selected elimination matches took place in Steel Arena, the second part of the championship, including the final matches, then took place in Bratislava.

In 2011, the city center also changed significantly. In the past, Liberators' Square was an empty area for many years; later it was paved, then a place of markets and a parking space. Only after long discussions was the Aupark shopping and entertainment center built and put into operation in November 2011, providing space for 130 business units on three floors.

2012 PERFORMANCE EXPLOSION

London is definitely one of the attractive addresses for marathon events.

And even the organizers from Košice did not miss this destination at that time. Especially in 2012, when there was even more of a reason to go. First, in April, to invite runners from all over the world to Košice for the mammoth expo, and then a few months later for the extraordinary Olympics.

And things were moving forward in Košice itself. Also in the fact that, after many years, the registration of runners and accompanying programs were moved from the Lower Gate to the nearby, recently opened Aupark shopping center.

Even years later, if we were to ask any of the participants what interested them the most on the marathon Sunday itself, they would have to mention the explosion of excellent performances in the men's race. Not only did we witness a new course record by 22-year-old and until then unknown Lawrence Kimayo, but three other runners also broke the old record along with him. And from this point of view, the women's race was also successful. For the first time in Košice, competitors ran below the 2:30 mark. However, unlike the men's race, this entry was only valid for one year. All this shot the marathon to the edge of the world's top ten in the end-of-year ranking. And it could have been a bit higher. Once again it was confirmed that the whip snaps at the end. The huge excitement associated with the dramatic end of the race for a moment disturbed the concentration even in the background, and the accompanying vehicle forced Kimaya to shorten his step for a few moments with an unexpected maneuver.

John Farrington was one of the first to congratulate the medalists exactly 40 years after his unforgettable victory in Košice. He flew all the way from faraway Australia. And he left a deep mark in the hearts of the viewers and hosts with his performance and empathy this time as well.

He was also joined by the Olympic biathlon champion Nasťa Kuzminová among the guests of honor, who also initiated her then five-year-old son Jelisje into the sport in Košice. Together with thousands of other runners, parents and children, they completed a mini-marathon. And today, years later, you can already find his name among the hopefuls of Slovak cross-country skiing.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

Interesting buildings were not only created in the distant past.

Many of the current ones are also worth paying attention to. The new building of the Church of God's Mercy from 2012, located in the Estate of the Košice government program, resembles a ship. However, its genesis dates back to 1995, when a competition was held for the urban-architectural design of this church. The entrance to the temple is modest, but the interior will enchant you. The authors also achieved monumentality with the unusual height of the ship, which reaches 17.4 m. A titanium-zinc shell wraps around an unusual construction inspired by organic architecture. Since its opening, the church in this part of the city has served the faithful as a spiritual center and the wider public as a visually interesting point of reference between the unified block of flats.

CITY OF THE MARATHON, CITY OF CULTURE

The marathon marked its 90th year, and connoisseurs still remembered last year's event, which brought so many exciting moments and great performance.

The defending champion was missing at the start, so Philemon Baaru, the previous year's silver medalist, was the last to run onto the course wearing the number one. However, this year, with a time almost 4 minutes slower, he could not have been satisfied with his sixth place finish. The opposite feelings were experienced by his 36-year-old compatriot Patrick Korir. He got out of bed that morning on the right foot, and his reward was a victory and a personal best improved by two minutes. And in 2013, but especially later, there was a lot of talk about the women's winner from Košice. She was Ashete Bekere Dido, who at the age of 25 was just getting started on her star career. She beat her winning time from Košice later so easily, it was as if she was running on a treadmill. So much so that in Tokyo she lowered it to 2:17:58 and in 2020 she also won the championship at the iconic Berlin Marathon.

Looking back at home-grown runners, let's mention at least two names. The gradually improving Jozef Urban caught up just behind the top ten, and Ingrid Petnuchová, from Bardejov, finished behind the quartet of African women in a valuable 5th place.

We have to look for Ladislav Bodnár's name much deeper in the results list. However, his time, slightly over four hours, is not important in this case. He became a marathon runner thanks to his great effort to reverse his fate as a homeless person and to find new meaning in life. What had happened to him also happened to other people with this fate. Let's also admit that thanks to the passionate work and support of another runner, the Catholic priest Peter Gombita.

And in 2013, another unusual man attracted the interest of the audience. World record holder Patrick Makau, who had won with a time of 2:03:38 in Berlin two years earlier. He did not compete in Košice, but he came to support everyone else. Among them were children, with whom he ran at an easy pace along the course of the popular mini marathon.

Well, it was also a year filled with events connected with the title of European Capital of Culture, which Košice was rightly proud of in 2013. And this wave gradually brought several new faces into the wider marathon event and into the organizational background. Some of them spent a long time preparing for the marathon.

For the second time, Jozef Urban also presented himself on the home course. Two number ones resulted, i.e., an 11th place finish.

The first big win for Ashete Bekere Dido. Seven years later, she was able to beat all her rivals even at the prestigious marathon in Berlin.

Košice was proud of the title of European Capital of Culture in 2013. New infrastructure was added, which the marathon itself gradually began to use.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY

Košice was the first city in Slovakia to receive the prestigious title of European Capital of Culture for 2013 based on the Interface project.

The "twin" for the metropolis of the East was the French city of Marseille, and in Košice itself at that time we witnessed unprecedented investment activities, the result of which are projects and complexes such as Kasárne Kulturpark, the Kunsthale, the City Park and several smaller community centers. The opening ceremony itself and the cultural and social events taking place throughout the year made the city of Košice significantly more visible on the world map. In the following years, it was also confirmed that the new cultural infrastructure can be an impetus for the development of the city and the region in a wider than just cultural context.

2014 ▶ WAITING FOR HILL

On Saturday, October 4, 2014, the hall of Košice's historic town hall was filled to capacity.

In addition to representatives of many generations of organizers, the gala event dedicated to the 90th anniversary of the marathon was also attended by several special guests. Among them are the president of the marathon association AIMS, Paco Borao, the head of European athletics, Hans Jörg Wirz, Fabia Flaviniová representing the marathon in Boston, running legend Ron Hill, the founder of the marathon in Berlin Horst Milde and the tireless ambassador from Pila, Poland, Henryk Paskal. However, there was not much time left for long celebrations. The marathon fire still had to be lit, the course and the last details at the starting point checked and at least some sleep was needed before the big day.

Before the starting shot rang out, four distinctive actors were greeted with great applause: the last four homegrown KPM winners. However, František Višnický, Karel David, Petr Pipa and Róbert Štefko did not remain in the stands. They created a unique relay team and proved to everyone with their performance that they are far from old iron.

Of course, all the favorites crossed the finish line before them, but looking at the times achieved, one could say that expectations were a bit higher. However, they can never be planned so well, in contrast to precisely organized celebrations. And it was the busy social program that sometimes caused some guests to worry. Well, mainly one guest. Ron Hill, who returned to Košice as an official guest after exactly half a century, could not say goodbye to running even at the age of 76. The former world record holder became visible also because there was not a day on his calendar that he had not run since December 20, 1964. And so he planned his flights and stay in Košice really carefully for this reason. So much so that it was sometimes necessary to wait for him to coordinate his running with the planned program. That's also why he barely made it to the opening of the league match, to which the organizers of the marathon invited guests from all over the world to the famous Steel Arena.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

Thus, the first part of the large-scale complex construction of the flood protection of the city of Košice, which should be 12 km long after completion, was completed. The experience of the floods in 2010 showed that the flow profile of the river must be increased and at the same time the underground sealing wall must be solved to prevent seepage under the dam body.

In 2015, the marathon received another prestigious award, this time a European Athletics certificate for a 5-Star Quality Road Race.

But much more happened. Perhaps the most interesting thing was right on the course. The organizers were lucky when choosing the competitors. Sammy Kosgei from Federica Rosa's management group arrived in Košice as a favorite; he pinned the number one on his chest and the podium with the same number also belonged to him at the closing ceremony. Well, not only that. He was able to improve his personal best by 40 seconds and in the last kilometers, after admirable acceleration, he came very close to breaking the course record. In the end, he was six seconds short of double joy.

Great satisfaction then prevailed in the camp of the second-place finisher, too. This was the then unknown Collins Tanui. He almost didn't make it to the squad heading for Košice, when he only managed a so-so time of 2:16 in a race at home in Iten, Kenya. But the persistent persuasion of his manager and the fact that performances in African conditions are in many ways misleading. Especially if we consider that Iten lies at an elevation of 2,400 meters. However, what followed after his start in Košice is also worth mentioning. Collins Tanui changed his name for some unknown reason and became Jepheth Kosgei. And with this new passport, he returned to Košice in 2018. However, he did not finish the race, which was perhaps a good thing. If he had won, statisticians and archivists would have more to worry about explaining.

While on Sunday the spectators cheered at the tributes to the winners, early Saturday evening belonged to the memories of the legends of the past years in the more intimate atmosphere of the historic town hall. The main protagonist was the Belgian champion Aurèle Vandendriessche, whose name appeared under the statue of the marathon runner in 1965. Half a century later, when his health was no longer the best, he sent his son Tony to Košice. He brought warm greetings and did not go home empty-handed. In addition to everything else, he decided to bring his father a portrait of him. Or rather, the cardboard mockup of his figure, reminiscent in life size of the moments of Košice glory of the winner of the two oldest marathons in the world. And so we gradually received funny photos, capturing Tony in the airport hall or on board the plane, whose crew he was able to convince of the importance of the whole operation. And finally, the last picture came, when 83-year-old Aurèle Vandendriessche stood next to the model at home.

The six-day international motorcycle competition came to Slovakia again and for the first time ever to Košice. The world's top enduro riders presented themselves on the challenging tracks around the city on September 5-12, 2015, at the 90th edition of this prestigious team competition. Among the 450 riders from 30 countries of the world, those from the biggest countries, i.e., the Australians, were the most successful. The Motorcycle Olympics, as the competition is also called, was held in Slovakia four times before - in 1977, 1982, 1991 and 2005, always in Považská Bystrica and its surroundings. However, the Košice organizers did not leave anything behind and confirmed with this championship that the metropolis of the East has all the prerequisites for organizing the biggest sports or cultural events.

2016 NEWCOMERS AND VETERANS

The year 2016 also appears as extremely interesting when taking stock of the centenary of the marathon in Košice. Judge for yourself.

After several years of effort, it was possible to expand the area near the statue of the marathon runner. Otherwise, there was a danger that there would soon be no place to put the names of the winners. Seven more pylons were added from the original granite found in an almost forgotten Czech quarry. Jozef Klink, who was and has been for many years at the head of the KPM technical department and who undertook to coordinate this project for the Marathon Club Košice, could also say something about this project.

Another initiative in 2016 was based on the assumption that the road to victories should be paved with the widest possible base. And so the My First Marathon program was born. In a short period of a few years, it inspired thousands of runners who had hesitated until then to complete the premiere on this royal course. Well, at the opposite pole of running experience, the KPM Diamond Club was established at the same time, bringing together the most loyal runners and the brightest constants of the marathon in Košice.

And when calculating all the important moments, it is impossible not to mention a pleasant protocol event associated with the awarding of the European Fair Play Plaque of Merit award. The organizers took it from the hands of the Slovak representative in the European Fair Play Movement, Katarína Raczová-Lokšová, a great fencer and our former Olympian. In addition to her, another sports superstar, follower of Dana Zátopková, two-time Olympic champion javelin thrower Bára Špotáková, came to watch the runners' efforts. And she was not coming to a foreign environment. During her childhood in Košice, she spent many vacation moments with her grandmother here.

In the race itself, 33-year-old David Kemboi, running with the number 3, could not be beaten. He returned to the marathon course after a three-year hiatus and claimed the fifth victory of his career. In the women's competition, we once again witnessed a fast first half of the course and a more pronounced slowdown in the second part of the race. The favorites bet everything on one card, but neither of them had such a risky fast start.

After many years of effort, seven more granite pylons were installed on Peace Marathon Square, on which the names of the winners will gradually appear.

The live broadcast attracted tens of thousands of viewers to RTVS screens. It was necessary to prepare people and equipment for filming from the course.

Anna Oroszová almost never missed her home marathon. And she rarely found anyone faster.

David Kemboi Kiyeng was certainly glad at this moment that he didn't have to run any farther.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

MFF Art Film, the oldest, largest and most famous international film festival in Slovakia, founded in 1993 in Trenčianske Teplice, moved to Košice in 2016. The reasons are to be found mainly in the infrastructure that the city of the festival was able to offer after extensive investments within the European Capital of Culture project. The audience and the jury could watch a total of 160 films from 57 countries around the world at this "first" Košice edition.

However, the end of the year was no longer so optimistic. On December 9, an extensive fire destroyed the roof and part of the UPJŠ Faculty of Science building itself. Teaching and research laboratories were damaged, computer technology and many devices were destroyed. The repairs, which started almost immediately, required a lot of effort and financial resources in the following months.

ZÁTOPEK AT THE CENTRE OF THE ACTION

In this year, too, the organizers continued to look into lives and stories of this legend of athletics history.

First of all, those that left their mark in Košice as well. And since in 2017, a quarter of a century had passed since the last time the legendary Zátopek couple had visited Košice, there was no doubt that they would be remembered.

And so, the author's steps were directed in May to Prague's Troja, where 95-year-old Dana Zátopková still lived in the house of the famous couple. After this sometimes touching meeting, she sent her longtime friend, the boss of Prague's Dukla club, a native of Košice and a former triple jumper, Jaroslav Priščák, to Košice to receive many greetings and another well-deserved award on behalf of her and Emil.

And other special guests also arrived. Tegla Loroupeová, the world champion in the half-marathon from 1997, also came to brush off the memories of the title from Košice. She, in addition to this title, was also happy about her top finishes at marathons in New York, Berlin, London and Rotterdam. However, she also returned in a different role. As the UN ambassador for refugees at that time, she was at the head of important projects. Those that allow athletes fleeing in the wake of serious threats from their homes to start at the Olympic Games.

If we look into the preparation of the race itself, we see that Tibor Sahajda was going to try the Košice course for the first time. He had a difficult debut at home. He consulted with it with honor and thus laid the foundations of his later and even more successful starts.

At that time, 23-year-old Reuben Kerio was the youngest and smallest in the field of favorites. Before this race, he had a victory in Brescia, Italy, and after that in Košice, unaware at the time that he was far from saying the last word here. In the women's competition, the first places were shared by African runners, but at the end of the top ten we also find domestic runners. Katarína Lamiová from Košice, also known by her maiden name Labašová, took ninth place. A more attentive reader will know that she is a well-known and successful orienteering runner, who later pleased those around her by winning the title of veteran world champion.

This year, Ján Sudzina was elected as the head of the Marathon Club, armed with his own experience as a runner and many years of work in the KPM team.

Signatures of favorites and special guests are traditionally collected in Košice on the Saturday before the race. It was no different on September 30, 2017.

Last to reach the finish line is 80-year-old Andreas Ziegler, accompanied by the well-deserved applause of those who had the medal hung around their necks a little earlier.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY

On October 31, 2017, Košice became the first Slovak city to become a member of the prestigious club - UNESCO Creative Cities Network. Behind this initiative can be seen the activities and projects of the non-profit organization Creative Industry Košice (CIKE), whose roots go back to 2008 and which has established itself as one of the leaders in the field of supporting the development of the cultural and creative industry in the city and in the wider region. Membership in the mentioned network enables the city to better use the many synergies and experiences that such an international community offers.

2018 THE OLDEST ALSO ON THE TITLE

In 2018, a bronze bust of its founder Vojtech Bukovský was ceremonially unveiled two weeks before the start of the marathon.

It was created from the design of the then-deceased Arpád Račko and could not be installed anywhere else than on the square bearing the name of this iconic event.

But the year 2018 became memorable in wider contexts as well. One hundred years had passed since the founding of Czechoslovakia and it is not necessary to recall that the history of the marathon was indeed closely connected with the history of both brotherly nations. This was also the impetus for introducing an unusual marathon relay on the course. In its ranks, we could welcome Olympic champions from both banks of the Morava River. Matej Tóth, the fastest walker from Rio 2016, and his friend David Svoboda, the Czech pentathlon champion from London in 2012.

Ernst Andreas Ziegler was looking at us from the cover of the rich program bulletin. A photographer captured this steadfast friend and ambassador of the Košice Marathon at the moment he crossed the finish line a year ago. Professor Ziegler, also known as the initiator and organizer of the commemorative run between Wuppertal and Košice, took to the start in the metropolis of the East at the age of 80 again. This time as the oldest participant ever.

The concentration of the favorites did not want to be disturbed by the mentioned number of social events and spent the last time mainly in light training and relaxation under the caring hands of physiotherapists. It obviously helped eventual winners Raymond Choge and Miliam Ebongon the most. Ebongon again took a proper risk; she reached the turn in just under 72 minutes, and although she slowed down significantly after that, even a three-minute weaker second lap was finally enough for her to take the lead. Tibor Sahajda, the favorite of the home audience, ran much more sensibly. In contrast, he gradually accelerated and at the finish line he was rewarded with eighth place and a new personal best.

Tóth in the viewfinder again. This time also with Olympic pentathlon champion David Svoboda. Together with Štefan Hrušovský, they were given the task of starting the race.

There are always several people impatiently waiting for the runners at the finish line. In 2018, the presenter duo Radka Kovaľ Mazáková and Saifa. After his start ten years before, he was able to look at the marathon events from a different perspective.

You can see the satisfaction on Raymond Choge's face.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY <sup>1</sup>

On February 6, 2018, a monument dedicated to the Norwegian Nobel Prize winner for literature Bjørnstjern Björnson (1832 – 1910) was opened in the City Park. The work with the symbolism of an open book and bird wings was unveiled on the occasion of the 100th anniversary of the founding of Czechoslovakia, in connection with the involvement of this Norwegian writer in the fight for the rights of Slovaks and other small nations.

Festive moments were soon replaced by dramatic ones. On February 27, a fire broke out on the roof of the tax office building on Železničná Street. The flames destroyed the roof, thick plumes of smoke enveloped the city center, and the extinguishing itself, complicated by wind and frost, lasted until the late afternoon.

No one knew during the promising start of 2019 that the constantly growing curve of interest in participation and events at the marathon in Košice would soon be knocked down almost to the bottom.

All that was to come a year later; all of that was not yet to affect the downright euphoric mood brought to Košice in their suitcases by runners traveling to the marathon from all over the world. We don't know how honestly they packed, but if they forgot warmer clothes, they made a mistake. From the last days before the start, Saturday looked the most threatening, soaked by a flood of water pouring from heavy clouds over the city. However, the marathon fire had to be lit, and late in the evening, as if by a miracle, the persistent wet antics came to a stop. The elements only handed off the baton, however, and by morning a strong wind arose, due to which everything had to be fastened down well.

In dry and warm weather, Ingrid Kristiansen enjoyed the last hours before the start. The iconic world record holder, multiple winner of the marathon in London, came to cheer everyone on in the year in which we were supposed to recognize the fortieth female winner. She first recounted her life story and perspective on the then and now marathon in the full and eagerly listening lounge of the Hilton Hotel, so that a day later, cold here, cold there, she ran along the mini-marathon course and later managed the last leg of the junior relay that bore her name .

Those from whom it was expected were already at the finish line. The victories went to Kenya and Ethiopia, in the case of the female champion embellished by another course record. And the euphoria in the streets of the city was once again caused by the local hero Tibor Sahajda. His new personal best of 2:15:25 resonated even more than seventh place in the overall rating. Attentive statisticians immediately reported that this performance at that moment became the fourth fastest time of a Slovak runner in the entire history of the marathon in Košice.

A few months later, in May, the city was the scene of another world championship in ice hockey. This time with a significant change, when the Slovakian team was introduced in the basic group from Košice. It found huge support from the audience in the Steel Arena, but even that was not enough for the desired promotion to the quarter-finals of the tournament.

Archaeologists were more fortunate; they this year found a unique discovery in the basement of the Levoča house in the form of more than 500 silver coins from the 15th to 17th centuries and a number of other artifacts.

2020 CONTINUITY PRESERVED

Looking at the events of 2020, we must add in one breath that the generation of that time had never experienced anything similar.

The COVID-19 pandemic paralyzed the whole world, and although it seemed for a while in the summer months that life would return to more normal tracks, autumn turned everything upside down again. Marathons were canceled one after another around the world.

And so at the beginning of September, the organizers in Košice were in mourning. Since the spring weeks, they had been in communication with the authorities, arguing, writing safety manuals, studying, attending consultations, collecting supporting opinions... The space, then defined by constantly changing decrees, gradually became smaller. The enormous effort to preserve historical continuity ran into obstacles, after overcoming new ones that always appeared. The condition to test all runners became a beacon of hope. Even in that case, however, there could be no more than 200 on a long-haul route. Test? What, when, how, and with what help? Time flew like crazy.

Fortunately, the social prestige of the marathon opened many important doors. It allowed the readiness of the organizers to cope with any strict conditions to be explained. On Friday morning, 48 hours before the start, a courier who had been driving all night brought the previously unknown and unexpanded antigen tests. On Saturday, Professor Jarčuška's team tested two hundred carefully selected runners, and one could only wonder what Sunday morning would be like.

Even before that, literally in a few days, a new shortened circuit was created, which was then completed by runners in the city center ten times. Because everyone knew that closing the original course would be pointless in this case. The last time the marathon was run without foreign participants was in the eventful year of 1968. Then because of a military invasion, now because of an invisible army of dangerous viruses. Although the organizers made one exception. Petra Pastorová, who lives in Ostrava, resided in a training camp in the Tatra Mountains during the restrictions. And so she could come according to the rules of epidemiologists. She came and won. Marek Hladik accompanied her on the podium. A decision made by Tibor Sahajda opened the way to the championship a bit more. The paper favorite chose to give priority to the World Half Marathon Championships in Gdansk, which in the end, were not held either, and Sahajda lost perhaps the only chance he would have to win the marathon in the city that became his permanent home.

Saturday's testing was an essential condition to be able to run on Sunday.

Tibor Sahajda wanted to give priority to the World Championships in the half marathon, so he had time for an interview in Košice with Radka Koval Mazáková.

Marek Hladik chased after victory in this extraordinary race.

This trio also moved together for a long time on the sparse course. In the middle, Martina Bányaiová, running her first marathon in her life, accompanied by the much more experienced Peter Gombit (149) and Imrich Mihok (163).

The hard-tested team of marathon organizers met in May in places that are more than symbolic in order to find encouragement. Even then, the 97-year-old František "Buben" Kapcár was not missing.

It was not easy to choose 200 runners from thousands of entries. Loyalty was also among the criteria. And that's why neither Eva Seidlová nor Peter Polák could be absent.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY

Empty streets, abandoned workplaces, closed schools, canceled cultural and sports events. It was clear from March that the global COVID-19 pandemic would change our lives beyond recognition. Everywhere, even in Košice. We observed measures for which there were not many precedents; we saw the deployment of doctors and paramedics who tirelessly fought for the lives of their patients. There seemed to be no other topics. The short summer relief was replaced by new waves of illness with the onset of autumn. The arrival of vaccines and vaccination campaigns led to a gradual management of the situation, to the hope that we will manage the next year a little better.

The return after COVID. That's how the chapter dedicated to 2021 could begin.

Although this viral disease continued to plague humanity, there were still signs of gradual improvement and the impending victory of medical knowledge. Extensive vaccination, which at that time affected the living things around us, certainly contributed to this. At that time, even public events could be held gradually, but with varying degrees of relaxation according to the state of vaccination or testing of the given target groups. The decrees spoke clearly. In Košice, there was no danger of the starting field being overheated, as it was the year before, but the joint starts of larger groups of runners were clearly conditional. And so the organizers were preparing for all sorts of scenarios. A part of them was also the preparation of several sectors, distinguished by colors and time, from which the runners would gradually reach the course. When creating the manuals, they had to use up literally all the colors of the existing range, but in the end it turned out that several could be saved. Out of the planned number of 10 starting waves, only 4 were realized in the end. This is also thanks to the high percentage of runners who proved to have a valid vaccination during registration.

Although the total number of runners was only 55% of the number in the record year of 2019, even that was an encouraging step on the way back.

In the men's race, Reuben Kerio then ran for his second victory. With a bit of luck, he could have packed a new course record into his luggage on the way home. In the end, he was exactly 18 seconds short of this double joy. Interesting battles took place behind him, and in one of them the home runners played a major role. Favored Sahajda could still smile at the turn to the second round, when he had Marek Hladik almost 4 minutes behind him. However, the end turned out to be unexpectedly dramatic, and at the finish line both of them, after an obvious crisis of the first of them, were finally separated by a much more modest 42 seconds. And dramatic moments came even a few minutes after they finished. The first three women finishers were able to squeeze in less than half a minute, and for the winner, the reward for her brave performance was once again a course record.

*On June 24, 2021, the Museum of Victims of Communism exhibition was opened in Košice, the first of its kind in Slovakia. In the fall, on September 14 to be precise, Pope Francis visited Košice. His program included a meeting with the youth at the packed Lokomotiv stadium and then with the Roma community at the Lunik IX housing estate.

The end of the year, December 18th to be precise, belonged to the celebrations of the centenary of Košice hockey. On this day in 1921, players of two Košice clubs - ČsŠK and KAC - crossed hockey sticks in the city park, then still Sokolsky.

To be able to run freely again. That was one of the slogans or wishes of the 99th edition of the Košice Peace Marathon.

After two demanding COVID years, it was fortunately possible to breathe more freely again, and this meant that the curve of runners' return to Košice showed a more joyful, i.e., steeper, direction. And quality did not lag behind these trends and numbers. Its reflection was an unprecedented battle for the championship in the men's race. The dramatic, balanced and fast race was also reflected in the final accounting. This brought a record value of the World Athletics result score, which was enough for Košice to rank 12th in the European and 17th in the global ranking of marathons in 2022. If we also look at this ranking through demographic or economic indicators, we will find that the cities competing with the KPM for a position in the Top 20 have an average of 2.5 million inhabitants. Ten-times more than reported by Košice.

However, not everything in 2022 could be considered encouraging. In February, war broke out in Ukraine, followed by waves of refugees and uncertainty reigning throughout the region. A situation the world has not seen for decades. Many residents of Košice and many organizers of the annual Peace Marathon spontaneously joined the great wave of solidarity and help. They also dedicated it quite spontaneously to Olena Burkovská, the Košice winner from 2009. She had to flee her homeland with her children as a result of the war. Košice became their temporary home for three days. And the attention and support they earned here has perhaps at least temporarily dispelled fears of an uncertain future.

And what else is worth mentioning? This year, the organizers embarked on several changes and experiments in order to test procedures and alternatives before the approaching jubilee. Several of them have fully proven themselves, but several program and protocol novelties have remained hidden in the drawers for now.

2023 UNDER AN AVALANCHE OF INTEREST

We had barely even entered the jubilee year of 2023 and things were already put into an unprecedented motion.

At the end of December 2022, a month after registration opened, the numbers of runners registered for the 100th marathon climbed to the numbers that we knew years before just before the start. And in March it was all over. The ever-expanding capacities hit a real, safe ceiling. The desire to start was enormous. Finally, it turned out that the total limit of 17,000 runners was a well-estimated maximum.

And what most pleased was the interest in the marathon itself. In the most difficult and most prestigious of the KPM disciplines, up to three-times more runners than in the previous year decided to start. A lot really happened before the first shot was fired. There were more subjects, ideas and complete concepts for celebrating the jubilee than the forces allowed. However, what was achieved was worth it. A large jubilee exhibition in the historical building of the East Slovak Museum, its counterpart in the building of the European Parliament, also supported by a charity relay run from Košice to Strasbourg, the unveiling of a bronze replica of the World Athletics plaque during the spectacular opening ceremony, the art installation Messenger of Peace, a large-scale mural painting on one of facades near the course itself or a series of short documentaries that were given space on RTVS screens to bring to everyone the famous and difficult periods of the marathon in Košice. All this was accompanied by celebrations that aroused legitimate interest throughout society. After ten years, Horst Milde, the founder of the marathon in Berlin, was among the many congratulators. His sincere words and admiration for the influence and importance of the Košice marathon tradition were really well listened to.

The long-awaited battle for the winners' crowns then took place on the course itself. In the end, Philemon Rono shined the brightest. Even though he did not attack his personal best of 2:05:00, he confirmed his qualities and, in a tactically excellent race, rewrote Lawrence Kimaiya's 11-year-old course record. Along with the others, those who have already collected great titles from other clubs went into the electrifying streets. A relay of champions made up of 10 Olympic gold medalists could not be missed. The gold finisher Naša Kuzminová and the legendary Robert Korzeniowski were relieved at the finish line that they had never experienced anything like this before in their competitions. And among all that, we also saw director Peter Kerekes's ever-intertwining crew, gathering inspiration and footage for the film, whose premiere in 2024 everyone was really looking forward to.

2024 FROM KOŠICE TO PARIS AGAIN

In the moments when the first readers open the pages of this book, we will be just a few days away from the culmination of the commemorative celebrations of the centenary of the marathon in Košice.

The authors of this publication also wanted to contribute to them. They consciously chose to give up the last facts and results so that we could put the book in our hands already on the eve of the centenary celebrations. At the same time, a space is created where the reader can literally write the last sentences of this story himself. Until that happens, let's take a look at some of the moments enhancing preparations for an eventful October. Which ones to choose, which ones to pay attention to, when there are so few lines? At this moment, perhaps it is enough to return to Paris to the places where Vojtech Bukovsky's steps led 100 years ago. The arc of time, after which the Olympic Games once again found themselves in the metropolis above the Seine, and the entire incredible century, filled with marathon events in Košice, invite parallels with an almost mystical background.

On August 9, the people of Košice went to Paris again. So that they can at least talk about what they have achieved during that time, what filled them with pride and which pains have already been erased by time. Really just a catch, so that they can return to the fast-flowing events as soon as possible. So that they have time to finish this book and prepare for thousands of runners from all over the world. To the runners and guests, many of whom return to us again and again with undisguised favor.

In addition to the guests from Paris City Hall, the president of European Athletics, Dobromir Karamarinov, and two legendary runners also took part in the commemorative meeting on August 9. Olympic champion from Mexico City Kipchoge Keino and the woman who conquered Košice in 1997. World half marathon champion Tegla Loroupe.

A few more conversations in the city on the Seine and hurry home, prepare everything necessary for October 6.

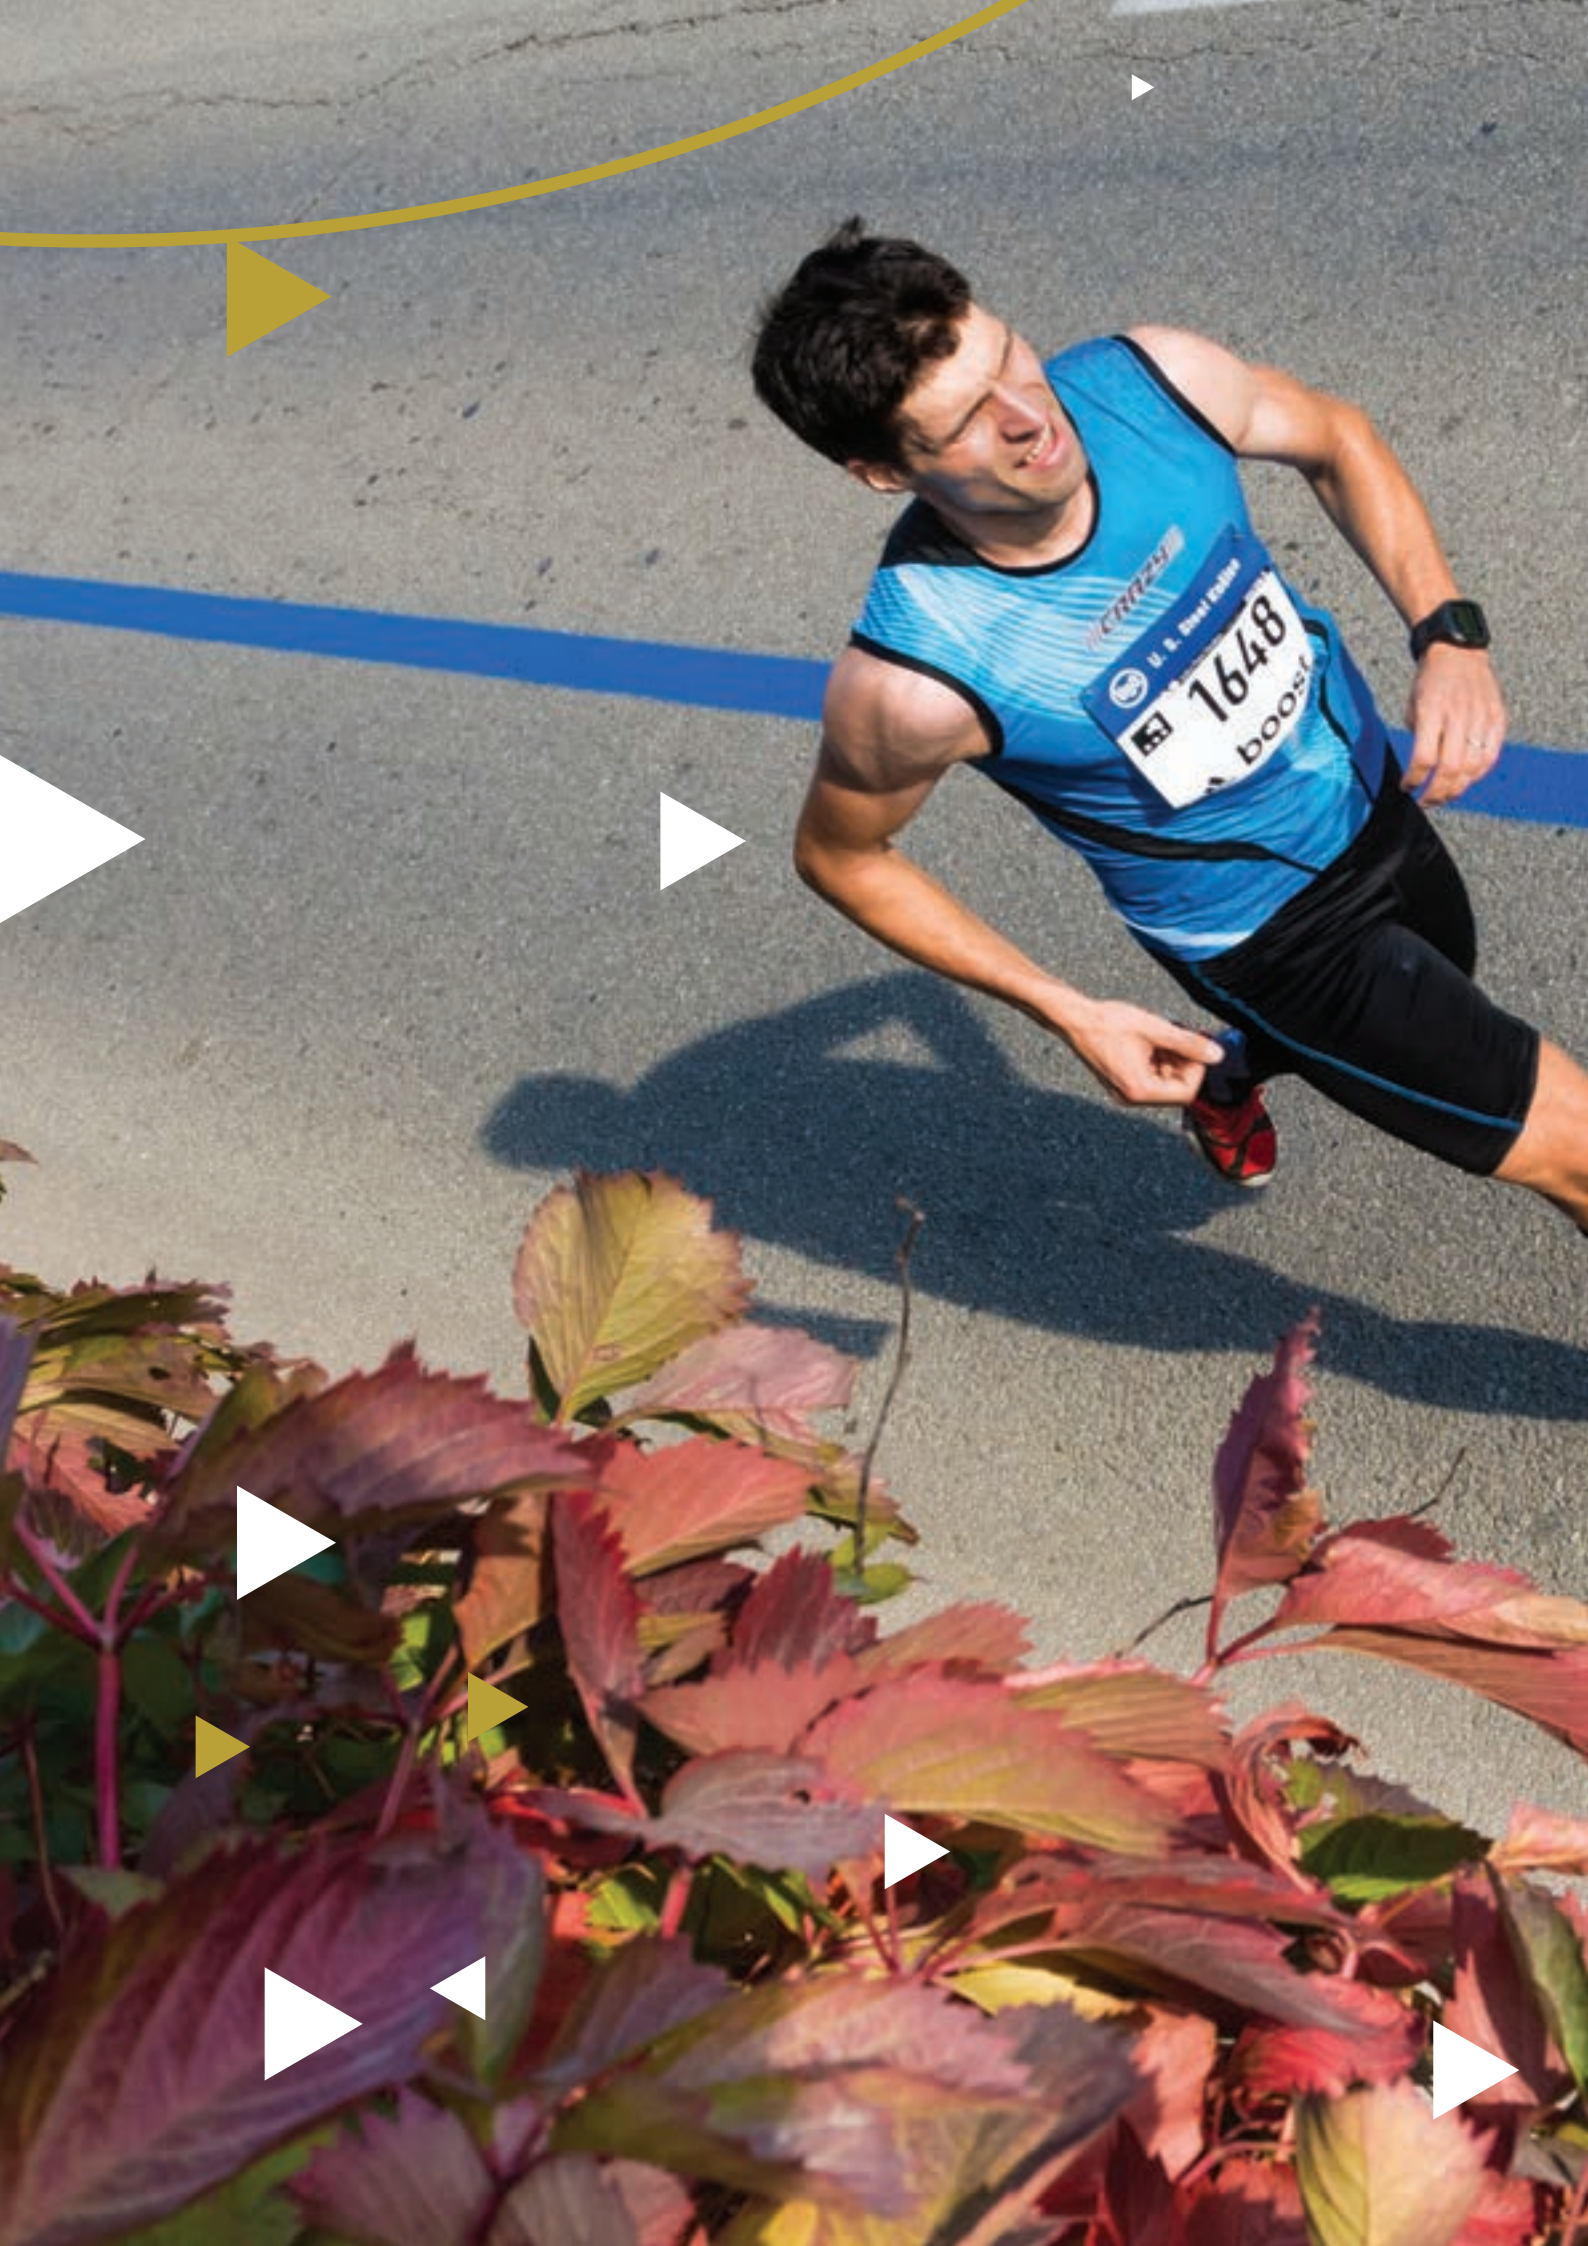

Paris was also conquered by Sifan Hassan. She took home three precious metals from the games. To two bronzes for 5,000 and 10,000 meters, she added a gold from the marathon.

FROM THE LIFE OF THE CITY ◀

Since this publication is primarily dedicated to the history of sports, more precisely to the history of the marathon in Košice, we dedicate the last lines to mentions of events in this environment. We will be talking about significant investments in sports infrastructure.

After several stages, the Košice football arena was completed in 2024, which was ceremonially presented for the first time on May 1 in its full capacity of 12,555 seats during the final match of the Slovak Football Cup. And in a few days, even tennis fans were waiting. The complex of the National Training Center, including 6 indoor and 8 outdoor courts, was put into use on Popradská Street. And this year, work on the reconstruction of the old indoor swimming pool into the future National Olympic Center for Swimming Sports started at full speed.

This is how Eva Kissová raised her hands above her head in 2023. A gesture she could repeat 37 times in Košice. She is rightfully proud of the position of the first lady of the KPM Diamond Club.

Alžbeta Tiszová can boast of an incredible string of successful performances in Košice. Between the years 1992 and 2023, she was not absent even once. And to this balance he can also add starts in 1981 and 1982. Even under the maiden name of Bernáthová.

In March 2023, Peter Polák recorded in his running diaries that he had crossed the finish line of 400,000 kilometers. If we add to that 47 marathon starts in his native Košice, there is no doubt that we are talking about a true KPM legend. In this photo, even while collecting target entries, his second cousin Vlado Polák is stepping on his heels (75). Maybe he will catch up with him one day.

Another of the constants of the marathon in Košice. „Diamond“ Jozef Sciranko has been faithful to the KPM since 1985.

* The marathon was moved to Budapest for this year, where it was held as part of the 1940 Hungarian Athletics Championships.

The second country is the country where we classify the competitor from today's point of view of the territorial arrangement. All names that are originally in a non-Latin script are listed in the Winners' Gallery in their English transliteration.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The country, year of birth and the number of completed marathons in Košice are listed after the name. The names are taken from the applications and results sheets as they were stated at the time by the runners themselves or the organizers. The three-letter code designations of the countries correspond to their identification in the period in which the runner participated in the marathon in Košice for the first time. Women's names are listed either as unmarried or after marriage, if the compiler had sufficient information about this.

The following lines may be less exciting for some than the previous one. But believe me, they are equally important, if not the most important.

Without the people whose names have been listed here alphabetically, there would probably be nothing. Many generations of people from Košice or people from near and far surroundings have always proudly held the flag of their marathon above their heads. And just as the race itself recognizes the best and those who had to settle for a place in the back, so the work for the benefit of the marathon brought generals to the fore, behind whom she assembled hordes of foot soldiers determined for everything.

However, time erases even these privileges. Because the effort to establish, develop or save the oldest marathon in Europe in every era of this century did not go without help from everyone. So before you start naming these precious people, please accept the apologies of the compilers of the lists published here if they have left anyone out through oversight or ignorance.

This is how the organizers of the marathon managed to meet in front of the building of the East Slovak Museum on September 7, 2023.

Above them – František Záborský, Igor Klema, Marián Švekuš, Miroslav Orság, Jozef Sciranko, Peter Buc, Jozef Klink, Peter Hrmo, Jozef Pohovej, Peter Nickel and Martin Pankúch.

A large marathon team is not easy to completely coordinate. That is why several of its members are missing from the photo. They also include Michal Barabas, Elena Belicová, Ivan Benninghaus, Andrea Filipová, Michal Janošik, Alfonz Juck, Daniel Jurko, Juraj Kalapoš, Peter Kolcún, Boris Kolenka, Radka Kovaľ Mazáková, Ladislav Kručanica, Ladislav Kucharčík, Branislav Labanc, Marek Meluch, Ingrid Ney, Ladislav Suchý, Luděk Šír, Ľuboš Štróbl, Mário Švec...

About the authors

The theme and the text part were prepared by Branislav Koniar, the long-time director of the Košice Peace Marathon. He came into direct contact with this iconic event already in 1988, when he completed the original course with a turn to Seča as a runner. He later added three more Košice starts to his account and several at the world's major marathon racecourses. In addition to continuous work on the development of races and the preparation of several long-term programs, he also devoted himself to publishing activities in the past period. His texts also appeared in book works that were published for the KPM anniversaries in 1999 and 2014. Later, he also published his autobiographical book Life as a Marathon.

The author offered his topic of linking the century-old history of the marathon with the most important events in the life of the city to Ľudovít Korotnoky, who has been dealing with these topics in various forms for many years.

The rich tabular part of the publication was prepared by the renowned statistician of Slovak athletics, Marián Kalabus, and Ján Dvonč, who for many years has been an integral part of the KPM team, contributed to the compilation of the book by working in the marathon archive.
